In 754, the Franks, under Pepin, gained the ascendency in Europe; and soon after this woman began to court this kingdom for her next husband, and succeeded in accomplishing a union, which lasted till A. D. 962, when the Germans, under Otho, gained the political supremacy in Europe. It was not long before the woman was united with this empire as her next husband, or head. This union continued till A. D. 1265, when all power, both civil and ecclesiastical, was on her hands, and she deposed or set up kings and emperors at pleasure. At this time, she divorced her German husband and was united to the Napolitans, who carried out her purposes in slaughtering the saints from A. D. 1265 till 1550, when the Spaniards rose into power, and gained the ascendency; then, true to her principles, she united with them; and they employed their armies in aiding her persecuting work till A. D. 1700, when the Austrians became the leading nation of Europe; and she united with this head as her next husband. This dynasty continued to sustain her till 1804, when the Napoleon dynasty came into power, and she was married to this as the seventh head.

When living with Austria, her sixth husband, she nearly completed her work of slaughtering the saints. It will be recollected that John saw this woman in the vision, at the time when she was "drunken with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus;" consequently, her great work was done. At this time, John is told, "five" heads "are fallen, one is, and the other is not yet come; and when he cometh, he must continue a short space." From this, we come to the conclusion that the woman was seen in this vision near the close of her union with the Austrians, her sixth husband, or head.

In our next we will consider her last husband, or the head from which she receives her last support before she goes into "the burning flame."

* A dynasty is "a race or succession of kings of the same line or family, who govern a particular country."

What the Spirits Teach.

Says a spirit, whose communication was published in the "Banner of Light," "No law of God was ever broken—no law was ever violated." "If Jesus Christ was the Son of the Most High God, so are you, every one of you." "You are all Gods, every one of you." These spirits show that they are in harmony with the "man-hating demon" who tempted Eve in paradise, for they teach the same doctrine.

Says another spirit, "What!" says the self-righteous man, "is God controlling the murderer when he lifts his hand against his brother?" "Yes, we answer, he is—and every atom in nature proves us true." Another says:—"We believe our God to be the author of sin, as of good. If we give him his due, we give him this." Another when speaking of the Bible says: "You may not place any confidence in that book .... I can assure my friend that God had no more to do with writing that book than he had, ... and don't expect to create any light in the mental world, if you cling to your Bible." Another, —"The only true religion is a natural religion .... you are your own Saviors." Says another:—"But the question arises, What became of the body of Jesus? We answer, the friends of Jesus stole away the body .... So then we will say the natural body of Jesus Christ was never reanimated after the crucifixion. All nature, our God, tells us so."

A spirit, who claims to be Timothy M. Baker, says, "I've got folks in Montpelier, and .... I want them to get my sister where I can talk to her straight as I do to you, and I'll knock her God and Bible all to nothing." Says another spirit: —"Every one of you are Gods manifest in the flesh." A spirit, calling himself Orlando Jenks, says:—"If I was coming back to preach, I should say, don't believe in God." Another says, "Christ was a natural man .... Christ never performed a miracle during his sojourn on earth."

Another, "The Mosaic Law .... was but a child, or outgrowth of heathen mythology, or heathen worship, therefore it must have been idolatrous, a worshiping of false deities, a yielding reverence to false gods .... All systems of religion, we care not how far advanced they must be, are but overgrowths of heathen mythology, overgrowths of idolatry, and God-worshipers of to-day are quite as much in darkness as were the heathen of olden time." Another says:—"Jesus of Nazareth was a good man, but by no means infallible—no more divine than you are, no more the special child of God than you are."

Editorial Notice.

We have received No. 12 of the Emphatic Diaglott," which extends from John 16: 32 to Acts 4: 27. This is a very valuable translation of the New Testament, and should be in the hands of every Bible student. This work contains "the original Greek text of the New Testament according to the recension of Dr. J. J. Griesbach, with an interlineary translation, in which every Greek word is literally and grammatically construed as it stands in the book." This is "a new emphatic version, based on the literal translation, the labors of the most eminent biblical critics and translators, and the various readings of the Vatican Manuscript, (No. 1200 in the Vatican library;) together with the philological and exegetical foot notes, and a choice selection of references; to which is affixed an alphabetical appendix containing all the geographical and proper names occurring in the New Testament, with difficult Greek words and phrases critically examined."

The first twelve numbers contain 384 pp.; the remainder 500 or more. The subscribers have paid $2.00 for these twelve numbers, and are offered the remainder for $2 more. New subscribers can have the entire work for $4. It is well worth the money. Direct to Benjamin Wilson, Geneva, Kane Co., Ill.

"The Last Pope."

A correspondent from Turin writes:—

"All classes are united that the temporal power of the Pope is at an end. The capitulation of Ancona destroyed the last vestige of a Papal army in Italy. He has nominal authority in Rome, but that is secured to him by the French troops. He can only do there what the Emperor of the French permits him to do. He and his cardinals feel that that he is a prisoner in fact. In Italy the feeling is intensely strong adverse to the restoring of any temporal power to the Pope. Many who rank themselves as Catholics do not hesitate to say that this is the last Pope. This feeling is gaining in all circles. So keenly does the Pope feel that his position in Rome is degraded and dependent, that he expresses the determination of leaving that city. Should he do so, it will greatly relieve France and all parties. Napoleon is committed to protect the Pope in Rome, but should he leave there, the Sardinian troops could enter without opposition. Should he remain, France will not allow other troops to enter. But the problem is not yet worked out. It is not yet certain that all Italy will be united under King Victor Emmanuel. I cannot believe that his Satanic Majesty will politely make his bow, and leave Italy an open field for evangelical christians to work in. No; he will, in some way, strive to regain what has been lost, and there may yet be much bloodshedding. There is no disputing one fact, viz., that the Pope is at present in a very tight place;—with the Sardinian army on the North, and the forces of Garibaldi on the south, he is between the upper and the nether millstone. It needs only the hand of Providence to turn these stones, and the Papacy must be ground to powder."

If the present is "the last Pope," we cannot be far from the great day of the Lord; for, according to Dan. 7: 21—22, this power, at the head of which is the Pope, was to make "war with the saints, and prevail against them, until the Ancient of days came, and judgment was given to the saints of the Most High; and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom." All things proclaim that within a brief period we "shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory."

In the last Allocution of the Pope, in the secret Consistory of Sept. 28th, 1860, when speaking of the movements of the king of Piedmont, he says:—

"This perversity has gone so far that the troops of the Piedmontese army having been sent as far as the walls of our capital, all communication has been cut off, the public and private interests have suffered, the trains intercepted, and what is still more serious, the Supreme Pontiff of the universal Church reduced to be unable, without great difficulty, to look after the interests of the Church, on account of the state of the roads, which are more and more confined within narrower bounds. It is therefore that in the midst of such great anguish, in presence of such a perilous position, you understand it well, venerable brethren, we see ourselves forced, even against our will, to the sad necessity of occupying ourselves with the measures to be taken for the protection of our dignity."

The Pope confesses that he is already "in the midst of .... GREAT ANGUISH." It appears that the "woman" on the "seven hills" is beginning to take a few sips from "the cup which she hath filled" for the martyred saints, with whose blood she is "drunken." Hers is a fearful doom, and rapidly approaching.

A Modern Miracle.

We clipped the following interesting account of healing from the Herald of Progress. The writer is a Spiritualist, and thinks the spirits must have done the work. He says:—

"I have for years had an agreeable acquaintance with the gentleman who has been so wonderfully healed. That I might be able to correctly report this case, after getting the statements from the gentleman himself, and not another, I spent nearly all of last Monday week with him, in the city of Chicago. His name is Benjamin F. Field. He formerly resided in Beloit, in this state. He now resides at Sheboygan Falls, Sheboygan County, Wisconsin. He was healed in the city of Chicago, about eight or nine weeks ago.

Mr. Field is about thirty-eight or forty years old. For many years he has been a member in high standing in the Congregational church. He is, in every sense of the word, a devout, religious man. He is an honest believer in orthodox theology. He has been, and still is, a most bitter opponent of Spiritualism. He is as fully, and as honestly, and almost as bitterly opposed to it, as Paul was to christianity, when on his way to Damascus, with authority from the priests to bind the saints. I should do Mr. Field injustice if I failed to state, that, though he admits the great cure that has been effected for him, and rejoices in it above measure, he attributes it all to God, and not to spirits. He goes so far as to say that he would rather have a mill-stone hung about his neck and be cast into the sea, than to have any one suppose he was, or would, or could be a Spiritualist. His reason assigned is, they (Spiritualists) deny the divinity of Christ. .... I will now give the facts of the case as I got them from Mr. Field himself. He and his relatives all say, he has from infancy, been afflicted badly in his right hip and leg. The afflicted hip often gave him great pain. His right leg was withered away, so as not to be more than one-half the size of the left one. This leg was also two inches and five-eighths shorter than the sound leg. He was, therefore, compelled, in order to walk at all without crutches, to have a special last made, and to have the heel of the right boot two inches and five-eighths longer than the heel of the other boot. This made his legs appear of the same length, but he always limped badly. In passing up or down stairs, or up or down a hill, Mr. Field was compelled to place the left foot first, and then carefully lift the right one after it. In getting out of bed, he always lifted the lame leg out with his hands, carefully.

Mr. Field is a natural mechanical genius. He has told me that all his best thoughts on mechanics, have been impressed upon him in the dead hours of night. His most valuable invention, and which promises as great blessings to mankind as the cotton gin or the steam engine, is the rotary plow, which he has brought to perfection. It is intended to be drawn by either animals or steam, as the owner may wish. .... It was for the purpose of completing this plow, and bringing it before the public, that Mr. Field visited Chicago and remained there for some time previous to his being healed.

While there at this time, having more walking than usual to do, his hip was more than usually painful. He finally went to a doctor to get him to make an examination of it. The doctor appointed the day following to make the examination, in company with another doctor. After agreeing with the doctor to have the examination made, Mr. Field began to be troubled about the consequences that might result to him, his family, and his business, if he suffered an operation to be performed. With these reflections he went the same evening to a religious meeting. While passing along the street, he cast his eyes upward toward the heavens, and beholding the moon and stars in all their glory, the impression came to him with much force that the same God who had made all these mighty worlds, and kept them in order and harmony, could heal his hip and leg without an operation by the doctors. He then received an impression, though not amounting to full faith, that he could and would be healed, but how and when he had no intimation.

After attending the meeting he took a bath, and then went to his room, attended to his devotions, and retired for the night. He had been accustomed to awake in the night, and get up and read or write. This night, however, he did not awake till morning. Sometime in the night, he remembered distinctly, two men appeared to come to him and perform an operation on his hip. He remembers suffering from the operation, and also from the fear that he would be some time detained from his business thereby. In the morning when he awoke he felt no pain in his hip, and thought it was strange. He was, however, much surprised on looking at his legs, to find they were both of the same length. He doubted his senses. He thought he must be asleep yet, or laboring under some hallucination. He placed himself straight in bed, stretched himself out, put his feet against the footboard, and demonstrated to his own consciousness that he was not mistaken, but that his right leg had been made as long as the left. Other surprises attended him. In getting out of bed he learned that he could use the right hip and leg the same as the left. He was relieved from the necessity of lifting his limb with his hands. But now his difficulties arising from the cure commenced. On putting on his pants, he found the right leg of the pants too short. Some power had lengthened his leg, but had left the pants for the tailor, or perhaps the doctors to lengthen. Another difficulty now presented itself. On putting on the long-heeled boot, it too was out of place. It made the right leg too long, by two inches and five-eighths. The only thing that could be done was to make the boot shorter and the pants longer, or to lay both boots and pants aside as a memorial of the painful, crippled, imperfect past. Our brother has wisely done the latter. I am sorry he has not laid his theology away with them, as too short for a well, full-grown man. Since this healing, Mr. Field is one of the happiest of men. He walks and leaps, and praises God, as did the man healed by Peter and John.

On Monday week Mr. Field and I took some long walks in Chicago, and I found it difficult to keep up with him. He was so full of life, and so disposed to hop, and skip, and jump, that I feared he would injure himself. I remonstrated with him, but for some time, found it of no avail. He jumped down a flight of stairs, got on the top of a high board fence and leaped from that, and was disposed to leap gullies and perform other dangerous feats of agility; I finally prevailed on him to desist by stating to him that he was treating the power and intelligence by which he had been healed badly, in not taking care of himself.

Mr. Field's healed leg is growing fast. He suffers no pain, and his general health is much improved. From long habit he still limps, but can avoid it when he thinks of it.

Pardon this long article; I think the case worthy a full history and publication."

Correspondence.

From Bro. C. W. Smith.

BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—You with whom I have formed an acquaintance during my pilgrimage, and all who love our Lord Jesus Christ, let me extend to you a hearty greeting, and say to you that I still love, and in my feeble way try to defend and propagate, the precious truths which we as a people hold. I still feel that these truths are precious; they appear more and more so as we approach the day that is to consummate our hope. We believe our dear Lord is soon coming to take unto himself his great power and reign; and that then the saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom, and possess it forever, even forever and ever. How the people of this world are now striving to see who shall obtain the ascendency among the kingdoms of earth! Truly they will be angry when the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom; when all dominions shall serve and obey him.

The wise of this world are devising plans whereby they propose to perfect the human family without Christ. They are saying, "We will not have this man to reign over us." And they are even now trying to prove that his coming to raise the dead is an absurdity, "for," say they, "the dead are alive already. But this stone which the builders are disallowing, will be shown to be the head of the corner; and when his voice rends the heavens, then "all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation." Then those who are now devising other ways of salvation than the word of God reveals, will be struck with awe, "And say to the mountains and rocks, fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb; for the great day of his wrath is come, and who shall be able to stand?"

When that solemn hour arrives we believe that all our dear friends that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him; knowing that he which raised up the Lord Jesus shall raise up us also by Jesus. Furthermore, we believe with the apostle Paul, that if there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen; and if this be the case, we confess with Paul, that we have no hope beyond this life, and are of all men most miserable. But, thank God, the apostle could say with confidence, "Now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept"; and as the first fruits represent the general harvest, we believe that "when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is"; and he will change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the "working whereby he is able to subdue all things unto himself." Yes, it is according to the working of him who is able to bring us again from the dead; and being, like Abraham, "fully persuaded that what he has promised, he is able also to perform," we feel like Paul, that our "faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God."

Believing as we do, that when man dies, he lieth down and riseth not; till the heavens be no more they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep,—that his "breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish,"—that in the grave there is no remembrance of our heavenly Father,—that the "dead know not anything"—that "there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave";—believing these things according to the Scriptures, we do not see how the saints can ever be satisfied until they awake in the likeness of their dear Lord.

Therefore we prize very highly those exceeding great and precious promises contained in God's word relative to the coming of Christ and the resurrection of the dead: two important events which must precede the fulfillment of all those numerous promises that refer to the future felicity of God's people. "Having therefore these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God."

Oswego, Ill., Nov. 1860.

From Bro. A. Ross.

Bro. Grant:—After a hard fit of sickness, which confined me to my house the most of the time for seven weeks, the last summer, I am again through the blessing of God in the enjoyment of good health, for which I do most gratefully return thanks to my heavenly Father. I am still looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior, Jesus Christ, believing that in a little while he that is to come will come and will not tarry. O how meager does every thing of this world appear when placed by the side of that glory which is to be revealed in us, when life and immortality, which are now brought to light in the gospel, shall beautify the church, and she shall shine forth as the brightness of the firmament and as the stars forever and ever. I cannot but long for that day, although loaded with feelings of unworthiness, and a consciousness of many short-comings. Jesus is the dearest friend I know, and I feel more interest in the evidences of his coming than I do in the election of any political candidate to the chief magistracy of the United States.

I have within a few months past wondered at the interest some have manifested in the late campaign, who profess to be looking for the Lord from heaven. To me, viewing the nations of the world from a Bible stand-point, with the prophetic glass to the eye, we have nothing to hope for. The last days are to be characterized by civil as well as ecclesiastical apostasy. The governments of earth are to fill their cup of iniquity, and then from the hand of God receive the wine-cup of his fury.

It may be argued by some that there is involved in this national struggle a moral principle, and that, the non-extension of slavery, and the protection of constitutional liberty. But if there is involved a moral principle it is higher than the claims of the Republican party; for they do not claim the right or disposition to meddle with slavery where it exists as a state institution, but only to keep it within its present limits and exclude it from the territories. Now in a moral point of view, if slavery is wrong in the territories, it is wrong where it exists; and if a political party, claiming to be guided by a great moral principle, says that the extension of slavery is wrong, then the same principle carried out should lead them to say that its present limited existence is wrong; and thus wage a war of aggression upon the monster where he is. But you say the constitution would not admit of such intervention. Then it seems to me that the constitution does not recognize moral principle as its basis, but human policy. And why this great outcry about moral principle in politics? It seems just calculated to mislead some of the honest children of God and frighten them into the political clubs and torchlight processions of the day.

Many a poor soul will, I dare say, come out of this presidential campaign with a lean heart, and the girdle of truth, if not entirely neglected, will hang very loose about his loins; but I hope such may learn a profitable lesson from past experience, and for time to come gird up the loins of their mind with truth, and hope to the end for the grace to be brought unto them at the revelation of Jesus Christ. Then will ensue the great emancipation from human bondage and from the bondage of corruption. Until that glorious era shall arrive may we not break our allegiance to the Kings of kings by aspiring to earthly rule, but let human events pursue their onward course until the prophetic calendar is filled; and then will come salvation and the kingdom of our God and the power of his Christ.

Hartford, Ct., Nov.

From B. Spaulding.

Bro. Grant:—I am on my way home, having been gone on this tour seven months, and am returning in good health, with a rich experience of God's goodness and power, and with my heart overflowing with gratitude. And among many patrons, who have kindly and liberally contributed for tracts and children's books and papers, I would mention with gratitude, Bro. Dickenson of Boston, Bro. Scribner of Topsham, and other brethren and sisters whose names I don't remember, and some of whom are unwilling their names should be made public. The Lord bless them abundantly; and inasmuch as they have watered others, may their own souls be watered with heavenly dews, until they shall become like a well-watered garden, or like the chariot of Aminadab.

When I look back upon this last tour, upon what has been accomplished, I am led to admire the mercy and grace of God, and to exclaim, Not unto me, not unto me, but to God's name be all the praise! He has chosen a foolish thing to confound the wise, a weak thing to confound the mighty, that no flesh should glory in his presence. I have been entrusted with a great amount of tracts and papers, which are nearly all distributed, and economically so, one or two in a family, and exhortation added with almost every one. I feel this work has been a privilege, I have enjoyed it; and, the Lord willing, I propose going again on the same route through Aroostook, next spring; and if any are disposed to assist me in providing tracts, they will confer a favor on me, and on the cause, by remitting their contributions to the office of the "World's Crisis," where I shall obtain my tracts.

I would further say, I get but little for my services, as I go mostly among the poor and destitute, where they are unable to give. My time I am willing to give to the cause, and all my surplus profits. I have done it for many years, and God has blest me in it. I have found the blessing of God maketh rich, and adds no trouble therewith.

Some may want to know of the state of things on the Islands. I wish I could give a favorable report, but, alas! lukewarmness and sectarianism prevail. The people need labor here; the fallow ground needs breaking up. Who will come? How many there are who might go, and God would bless them; they would find great hospitality among the people of Maine, and doors open almost everywhere, ears to hear and hearts to feel. Come, you whose hearts burn with love to God and to men; and while the fire burns, speak with the tongue. Time is short; the coming of the Lord draws near; what is done must be done quickly. Hark! the voice inquires, who will go for us? O! may there be some who will say, "Here am I, send me"!—Brethren, pray for me.

Deer Isle, Me. Nov.

From A. W. Lansing.

Bro. Grant:—In the Crisis of Oct 3d, we read a very interesting article from the pen of a Presbyterian clergyman in New Jersey, prefaced with the remark that two Baptist ministers in Philadelphia had come out boldly in the same views. That is an excellent article and shows depth and clearness of thought. Would it not make a good tract for circulation? Can we not have more of the particulars through the "Crisis" concerning the progress of the truth in those two localities, especially in Philadelphia? We want to keep our Baptist and Presbyterian brethren here posted up. It seems as though here were two excellent levers by which to work upon the public mind. We trust your correspondents will give us all the information they can from those quarters, for we think it would be read with interest.

Keeseville, N. Y.

☞ The Congregational Herald of Chicago notices "Christ our Life" as follows:

"Mr. Hudson is now the most prominent, as well as incomparably the ablest champion of the 'annihilation' theory of future punishment. The present treatise, of 160 pages duodecimo, is intended as a full scriptural argument for 'immortality through Christ alone,' his large work having been principally devoted to other aspects of the subject. His argument, though not convincing to our minds, is learned, ingenious, plausible, and in many respects instructive, and his spirit is that of seeming candor and seriousness. We trust it will be reviewed by competent scholars, in the theological quarterlies, who will meet it with argument and not merely with ridicule. We think that the author does not view the subject of 'life' from a right point, and consequently misconceives the scriptural doctrine of 'eternal life' as the reward of the righteous, and eternal death as the punishment of the wicked."

"Reasons for my Hope."—Eld. S. A. Chaplin, of Ind., writes of the above book:

"I have read the book with intense interest, and have found in it demonstration that though "heaven and earth shall pass away," the words of our divine Redeemer "shall not pass away." Truly, this gospel of the kingdom is being preached in all the world, and the end will soon come."

Obituary Notices.

Died, in Dubuque, Iowa, Oct. 9th, 1860, William Churchill, aged thirty-nine years two months. Disease, congestive chills.

William Churchill was brother to Eld Daniel C. of Lowell, who is well known in the eastern part of New England as an Advent preacher. William was the youngest of twelve children—nine sons and three daughters—and the first of the twelve that has been cut down by death.

Bro. C. professed religion when quite young. His reverence for God in his youthful days brought his tender mind under the influence of grace divine. He was mild, lovely and devoted. He was an acceptable member of the church (Baptist, I think,) when the proclamation of the second advent near at hand was preached, in 1840 or '41, through the East. He readily embraced it, and exhorted others in view of that day. The second coming of the Lord and kindred doctrines lay near his heart, and were cherished to the last.

Some eight or ten years since he moved to Dubuque, and remained there until last spring, when he went out to the mountains, and on the 4th inst. returned to Dubuque so much emaciated and worn out under fatigue and disease his wife scarcely knew him. He was soon taken with congestive chills, and the second one destroyed his life on the fifth day after his arrival. The circumstances are a source of great trial to his wife and friends. She had heard from him and was informed he was well and on his return home, and had made all preparations for a joyful reception. He came, but joy was turned to grief. He came home to die! No doubt it was a great satisfaction for him to reach his home and see his wife and the eldest child, but the words he uttered as he approached his wife—"I, am going to die"—stunned her. The fearful words were written on the tablet of that heart not to be erased, as fondly hoped, but to be made indelible in a few hours by closing the eyes in death, and the dear wife could say in truth, "I greeted him only to close his eyes in death."

The writer preached the funeral sermon at the Advent Chapel in Lowell, Mass., Sunday 21st, P. M., from 1 Thess. 4: 18, where our diseased brother formerly met and worshiped with those looking for the blessed hope. Our brother sleeps under the covenant of life, and will soon come forth to share immortality through Jesus Christ. He has left a wife and two children, with a large circle of friends to mourn his loss. May this deep affliction be sanctified to all, and the lone widow have God as her judge, and the orphans a heavenly Father to care for them. There is one thing I must mention which is remarkable. The wife and the wife's mother, who is a lone widow, eight mothers and wives, two sisters and husbands, and one sister unmarried, are all professors of religion and believers in the doctrine of the speedy coming kingdom of God. My prayer is they may so live they may all be counted worthy to meet together and inherit that glorious kingdom in the new earth for which they look and the righteous will share.

Walter Pratt.

Died, at Honeoye, N. Y., Oct. 5th, Sister Stacy, wife of Job Stacy, aged fifty-one years.

Our sister was afflicted with a cancer in her mouth, and for a year previous to her death, suffered constantly as much as it would seem possible for mortal to bear. None but those who have witnessed the effects of the cancer upon the human system, can truly imagine how great her sufferings were for a few weeks previous to her death. But her sufferings are over. She has gone where the "wicked cease from troubling, and the weary are at rest." She "fled for refuge to lay hold on the hope" of the gospel, and she found it a "strong consolation" in the hours of pain and trial. She chose the words of the Psalmist as a text for her funeral discourse: "I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness"—Ps. 17: 15. That that time will soon come is a consoling thought to her husband, daughter, and a large circle of mourning friends. No cancer then—no hours of pain and weariness—but everlasting joy shall be upon her head, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away.

Frank Burr.

The conflict is over with our much esteemed Sr. Susan C. Clewley, wife of Bro. Isaac Clewley of Holden, Me. She fell asleep in Jesus on the morning of Oct. 7th, aged forty-six years nine months and six days.

Of her it may be truly said, in the language of Holy Writ, "Who can find a virtuous woman? for her price is far above rubies. The heart of her husband did safely trust in her, so that he shall have no need of spoil. She did him good and not evil all the days of her life. She rose early while it was yet night, and giveth meat to her household. She stretched out her hand to the poor; yea, she reached forth her hand to the needy. Strength and honor were her clothing; and she shall rejoice in time to come [in the new earth.] She opened her mouth in wisdom, (divine) and in her tongue was the law of kindness. She looked well to the ways of her household, and eat not the bread of idleness. Her children arise up and call her blessed, her husband also, and he praiseth her. Many daughters have done virtuously, but thou excellest them all. Favor is deceitful and beauty is vain, but a woman that feareth the Lord, she shall be praised."

Hundreds, if not thousands who may read this notice will remember how kindly, readily and even gladly she ministered to their wants. Cheerfully for many years she spread her table to feed the saints of God, who always found an hospitable home at the pilgrim's hotel of her husband. She lived much beloved, and died greatly lamented. She now sweetly sleeps in Jesus, awaiting his return from heaven, whose appearing she loved.

May this afflicting dispensation be sanctified to the spiritual good of a lonely husband and large family of motherless children, to whom though now dead she yet speaketh. The funeral was attended by numerous weeping friends, who followed her to her resting place, where she will quietly lie until the morning of the resurrection.

Hark! a voice divides the sky!
Happy are the faithful dead!
In the Lord who sweetly die,
They from all their toils are freed!
Them the Spirit hath declared
Blest, unutterably blest;
Jesus is their great reward,
Jesus is their endless rest.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

SYRIA.

A letter of the 24th ultimo from Beyrout throws some light on the object of the military movements recently announced. On that day 3000 French troops started for Btedeen, in the Lebanon, within a mile of Deir-el-Kamar, for the purpose of getting the latter town rebuilt and its population of 8000 christians restored to their homes. Fuad Pasha left on the 22d for Sidon, about 2000 troops under Kemety accompanying him. The object of this move was partly to inflict punishment upon some of the Druses in Southern Lebanon, and partly to hem in those who might want to escape from the French force. Before leaving, Fuad Pasha issued an order confiscating all the lands and properties of such Druse sheiks as had not obeyed the summons to come in to Beyrout. All their lands are to be sold, and with their proceeds the government proposes to build up the Christian villages which have been burnt down during the recent outbreaks. The Anglo-American Relief Committee, thanks to the liberal donations from Great Britain, the United States, and other parts of the world, were feeding daily 12,000 persons who must otherwise have starved, and 3000 suits of clothing have been distributed amongst the victims, who were nearly naked. The American missionaries and their wives were in this work of charity and benevolence, always in the van.

A telegram from Turin informs us that the result of the voting at Palermo, on the question of annexation to Piedmont, was 36,232 ayes to 20 noes. Signor Farini goes to Naples as Royal Commissioner Extraordinary, and Signor Montegemolo to Sicily in a similar capacity, to carry the annexation in each case into effect. It appears from a telegraph dispatch from Naples that the number of votes given in that city in favor of annexation was no less than 154,000! a figure which is greatly in excess of the number of qualified electors, but it is explained that a vast number of persons were allowed to record their votes who were not enrolled, by establishing their right to enrollment, and their nationality. The voting being now ended, and the result satisfactory, Garibaldi will immediately demit his authority in favor of King Victor, agreeably to the official declaration made by him previous to the vote being taken.

The strangers resident in Naples have signed and transmitted to King Victor the following address, which was drawn up in the French language:

"To His Majesty, Victor Emmanuel, King of Italy. Sire: The foreigners who have been resident in Naples for some years past, are naturally interested in the providential events which are accomplished under the authority of your name, and by the happy audacity of the great patriot, Garibaldi. They come, to-day, to unite their voices to those of the whole nation, which calls you with anxiety to govern it, and reassure it against the ambitions and the illusions of a factious minority. The almost unanimity of the citizens of this country reprobates these intrigues, and waits for your arrival. We wish to join with them in saying 'Come Sire.' May your fidelity (loyaute) yet save that Southern Italy, which already forms part of your Italy. She asks only that she may flourish under your regular and beneficent authority, which has for its motto, 'Order and Liberty.'"

A severe disaster has happened to the Garibaldians or Italians. It occurred on the 20th, in the vicinity of a town in the Abruzzi. A column of Garibaldians and National Guards fell into an ambush, and was cut to pieces by some rudely armed peasants, assisted by a body of Royalists, no prisoners being taken. There will, in all probability, be some more fighting before the line of the Volturno is finally abandoned by the Neapolitans. But the circle formed by the Garibaldians and the Piedmontese is daily closing around the debris of the Neapolitan army, and the last act of the drama may be safely predicted to be at hand. Admiral Mundy and the French Admiral have left Naples for Gaeta, not only to break the blockade of that port, but to protect the flight of the King.

The warlike preparations of Austria on the line of the Po, says La Presse are becoming more and more menacing. The most recent intelligence announces that a corps of between 40,000 and 50,000 is concentrated between Ostiglia and Rovere.

THREE DAYS LATER.

The Neapolitan Royalists have again been defeated in an attack upon Garibaldi near Tessano. Many prisoners were taken by the latter.

Victor Emmanuel had joined Garibaldi at Sessa, and was making preparation for a grand decisive battle.

Very active warlike preparations were going on in France, but the Minister of Foreign Affairs had pronounced against France taking part in any new conflict between Sardinia and Austria.

Matters at Constantinople.—The World has an attentive correspondent at Constantinople, who gives information relating to the recent conflagration among the shipping at that port. He says, under date of Oct. 17:

"Through the day and night of Wednesday last, Constantinople was visited by a southerly gale of almost unexampled severity.

Many ships were lost in the sea of Marmora and in the archipelago—one or two also in Bosphorus itself. Many streets in the city were almost blocked up by boards, timbers and tiles, blown from the houses.

In the midst of this storm, about midnight, the alarm of fire was given, and for several hours the whole of this vast city was almost as light as day.

The fire commenced in the pontoon bridge (called by foreigners, the middle bridge,) which crosses the Golden Horn, near the arsenal.

This bridge had just been rebuilt, and was about one-third of a mile long, resting upon more than a hundred pontoons.

About two thirds of this was destroyed, and the fire spread at the same time to the shipping. The burning ships, breaking from their moorings, drifted down upon the lower, or Galata bridge, and set this on fire. But providentially the wind went down toward morning, and a heavy rain assisted in stopping the progress of the fire.

This fire was, undoubtedly, the work of an incendiary, and was either a political movement, designed to destroy the Turkish navy and arsenal, which were for some hours in the greatest danger, or perhaps the fire was set by the farmers of the lower bridge to increase their receipts from tolls. The middle bridge was free, and had just been opened for the passage of carriages and loaded animals. It thus very materially reduced the receipts of the lower bridge.

Nothing but a change in the wind preserved the greater part of the Turkish navy and the military and marine arsenals, state-prisons, etc.

The number of ships burned was twenty, with one steamer. Many others suffered more or less. The loss to the government on the bridge is about $100,000. A sad loss for a bankrupt treasury."

The Lord permitting, I will preach at London Bridge the first Sabbath in Dec., if it does not conflict with any other appointment. T. M. Preble.

A Proposition.

To any one who will send us a new subscriber for one year, we will forward, post paid, a copy of our late discussion with Eld. W. W. Clayton, on the conscious state of the spirit after death, and the destruction of the wicked. And for a new subscriber for six months, we will send a copy of the pamphlets on "Soul" and "Spirit." With a little effort, a thousand names may be added to our list. Let every reader try to aid in scattering the light and truth. Now is the time to work.

DARE TO BE RIGHT.

Dare to be right! dare to be true!
You have a work that no other can do,
Do it so bravely, so kindly, so well,
As to gladden all heaven, and silence all hell.

Dare to be right! dare to be true!
Cowards and quidnuncs dread every thing new;
If you can't stand at your post in a storm,
How can you fight in the ranks of reform?

Dare to be right! dare to be true!
Foes may be many, friends may be few;
Truth and her champions oft stand alone,
What's a man good for without a backbone?

Dare to be right! dare to be true!
Other men's failures can never save you;
Stand by your conscience, your honor, your faith,
Stand like a hero and battle till death.

Dare to be right! dare to be true!
Keep the great Judgment-seat always in view,
Look at your work as you'll look at it then,
Scanned by Jehovah, and angels, and men.

Dare to be right! dare to be true!
Love may deny you its sunshine and dew;
Let the dew fall, for showers shall be given;
Dew is from earth, but the showers are from heaven.

Dare to be right! dare to be true!
God, who created you, cares for you too;
Bottles the tears that his striving ones shed,
Counts and protects every hair of your head.

Dare to be right! dare to be true!
Cannot Omnipotence carry you through?
City, and mansion, and throne all in sight,
Can you not dare to be true and be right?

Dare to be right! dare to be true!
The sun may be red, the planets burn blue;
God may toss back the systems to chaos again,
But his promise forever is yea and amen.

The Evening and morning Visions of Daniel.—No. 5.

Having glanced at a few facts which characterize the evening vision of Daniel, it is well to notice a few of the many distinguishing features of the morning vision. The outlines of the latter were given to the prophet only two years after the former, although it makes no allusion to the first of the four great empires then in power. Some of the writers who claim an identity of the two visions, offer as a reason why Daniel did not introduce the beast representing the Babylonian empire, because that empire was so near its close! Those who could gravely urge the two years' additional age of the Chaldean power at the time Daniel had this vision, as a reason why one of the four empires was omitted, and still claim the two visions as identical, may be expected to overlook other important distinctions equally obvious.

Among the many reasons why the two visions of the prophet are not identical, I begin with the facts that different events are predicted, taking place in different countries, and which have each a different beginning, duration and end. In order to gain a clear view of these distinctions the student of prophecy must mark these facts.

A voracious bear with "three ribs in his mouth" (chap. 7 : 5) aptly symbolized the character of the Persian monarchy; but here (chap. 8 : 3) a "ram with two horns" is the symbol. History tells us this was the emblem upon that country's standard, as the eagle on ours, and the lion upon the British flag. One horn of the "ram was higher than the other (verse 3), and the higher came up last," denoting the Medes and Persians who were united in the conquest of the world, the Medes being the more ancient, but the Persians becoming the more powerful and renowned.

Instead of the leopard "with four wings of a fowl" and "four heads," (see evening vision) the Grecian empire is here represented by a goat, at first having one horn, significant of Alexander, the Great, with his family and princes before they became extinct. Here, too, history asserts that the goat was the emblem upon the ensign of the Macedonian kings, of whom Alexander was the most renowned.

A few years before his death, the newly acquired empire was divided into four kingdoms and the following verses are almost like a history of the facts, so striking are the figurative representations and descriptions used by the prophet. When Alexander menaced Asia with an invasion, Darius, the Persian emperor, treated his project with the most affronting contempt, and afterwards attempted to bribe his physician to poison him. These insults and hostilities so highly exasperated Alexander and his troops, that they pursued Darius rather as an assassin, than as a competitor for honor and empire. Thus did the "he-goat, moved with choler," smite and destroy "the ram."

Alexander, having subdued all his foes, and extended his fame and the Grecian empire over the world as then known, died suddenly at Babylon. His family was extinct in a few years, and then arose the four kingdoms which were denoted by the "four notable horns." These were Macedonia, Thrace, Syria and Egypt. The same which, in the former vision, had been denoted by the "four wings of a fowl" on the back of the leopard (chap. 7 : 6). It is just as important to mark these coincidences, as to understand the distinctions in the two visions as we proceed to the grand climax.

Out of one of these "four notable horns" came forth a "little horn, which waxed exceeding great, towards the south, and towards [illegible], and towards the pleasant land." How a student of prophecy can mistake the power denoted by this "little horn," the time of its development, or the theatre on which its part was enacted, seems incredible! and yet so it is. Even Sir Isaac Newton, and Bishop Newton, strange and incongruous as it may seem in writers who are usually so sound and consistent, suppose that this "little horn," out of one of the four horns of the Syrian goat, denotes the Roman empire, including the papal "little horn," with the nameless beast of the evening vision!

Having demonstrated the fact, that this vision of the prophet does not include the Babylonian empire, I assume, and promise to prove the fact, that it does not enter the Roman empire, either in its history or territory. But as we have come to the notable point in the road where so many travelers part, taking different directions and entertaining such diversified views,—I will pause a little. D. C.

Another "Loved One" Fallen.

It has become my painful duty to be the bearer of heavy tidings; and most deeply have I felt the truth of the inspired words, "Where one member suffers all the members suffer with it."

On the plains of California, at Antelope Springs, one hundred miles from a white settlement, lies our beloved sister, MARY L. FIKE, aged thirty-five years and five months. She died Aug. 8th, 1860,—the news of which has just reached us, in a detailed account by her bereaved husband, with his special request that we prepare a suitable notice of it and send to the Harbinger and Crisis. He says, "Can it be that Mary is dead? Sometimes it appears to me like a dream. Mary was a kind wife, and an affectionate mother, and how to live without her I know not."

Bro. and Sister Fike, with four children, the eldest a daughter, about sixteen, and the youngest about nine, left Warsaw, Ind., in March, for California. Our sister's health was delicate, but her decided preference was to go, as she had near friends there. They joined one of the largest companies that crossed the plains this season, amounting in all to sixty wagons. Our dear sister endured the journey better than she had dared hope, until the heat of summer, when she began to fail. From about the 7th of July she was confined to her wagon; and from about the 26th was confined to her bed, requiring strict attention, day and night, which, we are most grateful to record, she received at the hands of many, but especially from a Mrs. Wilson, a physician and nurse, who waited upon her (said her husband), as if she had been her own child. The whole company stopped with them at different times when she could not travel, until provisions becoming low, they made a riding-bed with springs, which, says our Bro., "a well person would have thought very comfortable, but, dear Mary did not. On the morning of the 4th of August she seemed revived and thought she could travel. They said we should drive in advance of the train to avoid the dust; but the road being rough we soon had to turn aside and let the train pass on, and did not overtake them till late at night, being met by a number of young men with torch-lights to conduct them in." Thus they continued till the fatal 8th, between hope and despair. "Towards evening," says our Bro., "Mrs. Wilson discovered that she was getting worse—heretofore she had encouraged us that she certainly would recover. Between six and seven o'clock I had stopped to let the team rest, and heard Mary breathe more singularly than usual. I stepped up to the wagon when Mrs. Wilson looked at me and said, 'I fear she is very bad.' I looked at Mary and saw she was dying. We were then behind the train several miles; my other team had gone on; none present but Mrs. Wilson, Narcissa (the eldest), George and myself, to see our loved one take her departure. We finally moved on towards the camp where we arrived at ten o'clock. On the morning of the 9th, Mary was buried, one hundred and fifty miles from the state line of California." They arrived at their place of destination on the 26th, and think they could have done well had they all got there; but now, he says, "My all is gone; but my great consolation is that I hope to meet her in the resurrection, and that before long. O dear friends! I think the good Lord will not forget her, but will raise her up out of her grave and crown her with eternal life. My dear children take it very hard; but I try to console them by encouraging them to be good as was their mother, and then we shall all meet her in a few years, in the kingdom of God to die no more."

Bro. and Sister Fike became interested in the soon coming kingdom; the second death as the penalty of the divine law, etc., some ten or twelve years since while neighbors to us in Oswego, Ia. They were baptized by Bro Chaplin, and have been highly esteemed in the church ever since. It is due our sleeping sister to record that she led the way in these things. Never did I see a more decided purpose to obey God than she witnessed at that time, and the Lord gave her her husband also. Her kindness of heart and overflowing hospitalities were proverbial; and I feel it due her excellencies to be thus largely noticed by the children of God. Our brother says in speaking of the time when he was brought to see these things, "Thanks be to Heaven for the precious light. I could weep my eyes into tears, were it possible, on account of our bereavement; yet, I sorrow not as those who have no hope. When I reflect upon Paul's words, 'For we know that all things shall work together for good to them that love God,' and that I shall see Mary again in a glorious and immortal state, it revives me, and gives me joy. O! Lord, may thy kingdom soon come and thy will be done in earth as it is done in heaven. May God help me to be a faithful christian unto the end. Dear friends, pray for me, and my children."

Yes, my brother, you are remembered by us, with your weeping children. Our sighs, and tears and prayers have already mingled with yours to a kind and gracious God, that he would sustain and comfort you, and give you the desires of your hearts that you may be made meet for the kingdom of God, and finally meet your loved and lost therein, to die no more. And our daily prayers go up with yours, "Thy kingdom come," as the only antidote for the groans of this groaning creation. "Amen, even so come, Lord Jesus," is our whole-souled response to His thrice-repeated, last prophetic words, "Behold, I come quickly. Blessed is he that keepeth the sayings of the prophecy of this book." "Behold, I come quickly, and my reward is with me." "Surely, I come quickly," and the signs of the times echo n trumpet tones, surely, I come quickly, while "his own elect" respond "day and night," amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus.

Prayer.

"Pray without ceasing." What cause of backsliding is there so fruitful as ceasing to pray? Truly, as the poet says, it is only while we pray we live.

"Prayer is the christian's vital breath."

Many who have run well for awhile, have stumbled through neglect of prayer. And is it not certain that all who cease to pray will backslide? just as surely as the stopping of the breath will cause death. What vast numbers of those who have made a public profession of their faith, are forced to acknowledge that they have ceased to pray. Let us notice some of the excuses they make for neglecting this essential duty. One says, "I am all the time surrounded by those who do not profess religion; I work with them through the day, and room with them at night. I have no time or opportunity for prayer." We will admit that this is a sad case, and by no means an uncommon one. But we must insist that if a person has time to eat and to sleep, he can also find time to pray.

Solitude, though very desirable, is not quite essential to the performance of this duty. Neither is it always needful that prayer should be uttered in a loud voice. Surely every one who has a disposition to pray can find time and opportunity for silent prayer.

One says, "I have no heart to pray! no inclination, no desire to pray!" Is it pos ible that any who are in "regular standing" in any of the evangelical churches of our land are in such a state? We have reason to believe this class to be quite numerous. Some who are in this state do not dare to say so in words; but truly in this case "actions speak louder than words." If all the millions who profess religion were truly devout, praying christians, what might we expect? for "the effectual fervent prayer availeth much." Truly, we might expect to see a "nation born in a day," and we should be almost ready to look for the conversion of the world.

But we know there are some praying souls, and let us all unite in praying that our number may be increased. Let us "pray without ceasing, and in every thing give thanks." F. H. C.

"Come."

"Let him that heareth say, Come."—Rev. 22: 17.

Here, my christian brethren, is a most important command, duty and privilege, involving the honor of our divine Redeemer, the salvation of dying men, and our own spiritual interests. "He that winneth souls is wise." Let him that has been blest to hear and believe the glad tidings of deliverance from the power of sin and eternal death, by the obedience unto death of the Son of God, and refreshed his own soul at the fountain of the water of life, "say come," to those around him, who "must drink or die."

Observe on whom this duty is enjoined. It is not limited to the officers of the christian church. It is the indispensable duty of every one "that heareth" the good news to proclaim it to others. Thus, when the members of the christian church at Jerusalem were, by "a great persecution," "all scattered abroad," "they went everywhere preaching the word."—Acts 8: 1–4. They did not compose sermons. "Preaching the word" is a more simple matter than many imagine, who excuse themselves for the neglect of this imperative duty by saying that they have no gift. The child who loves Jesus, and tells his little brother what a dear Savior he has found, "preaches the word." These scattered disciples proclaimed the truth of the word of the Lord that Jesus of Nazareth was the Son of God, the Savior of the world, they preached "repentance towards God and faith towards our Lord Jesus Christ." They preached Jesus and the resurrection to eternal life through him and through him alone.

No gift! What should we think of a man who should know our house to be on fire over our heads, and never warn us to flee for our lives; and when we reproved him for his inhumanity, should tell us he had no gift; he had never been to college to learn the art of elocution? Do we not know that all around us are men and women who are in danger of being eternally destroyed soul and body "in the lake of fire," which "is the second death? Do we not "not know that he which converteth a sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins!"—James 5 : 20. We know, too, that God is pleased, in infinite love and mercy, to bless the most simple means. A word of affectionate, earnest entreaty, or of kind, solemn warning, may result in our meeting at the right hand of the Judge of all the earth, a poor sinner saved through our instrumentality.

Do we say that public houses of christian worship are opened, and that it is the duty of sinners to come there and hear the gospel? True, but there are thousands who will not come. Has not Jesus Christ commanded us to "go out into the highways and hedges and compel them to come in, that (his) house may be filled?" Did not Jesus Christ seek after us when we were wandering from him in the wilderness of sin, calling to us in accents of forbearing love, "Why will ye die?" O for more of His spirit, who came to seek and to save that which was lost! HENRY GREW.

Fault-Finding.

The article in the Crisis of Oct 24th, by H. W. Beecher, reminds us of the convenient way some people have of polishing themselves by blacking others. They will set themselves up as the people with whom wisdom must die, and if you call in question their "know so," they will say you are fault-finding. They will assume that they have the right to demand, and you have the privilege to say, amen. And if you don't do it, and tell them why, then they say you are finding fault. They may say what they please, and where they please, on any subject, and if you claim the same right and refer to them for example, they are ready to charge you with taking "a man up as you would a chicken, and gnawing his flesh from his very bones." They may claim the right to give to others "times and laws" to stretch, or cut off every one who may not fit their bedstead, to be responsible to no power, claiming that all should submit to their diction, riding rough-shod over the judgment and rights of others; and if you complain, and tell them what they are doing, and point out to them a more excellent way, they will turn on you by saying. "O! you are fault-finding"; you are watching to see what you can find against us. You are eating a man alive,—you are worse than "cannibals!"

Now this kind of way of disposing of fault-finders, may do very well for those who, puppy-like, can be frightened into submission; but it will be a poor "get off" to those who do not make policy their rule of right. We would suggest, might it not be as well to give less occasion for fault-finding? J. S. WHITE.

Foreign Religious Revivals.

Extracts gathered from letters from different sources, which will be read with interest.

"From the "News of the Churches."—"A few years ago it was a work of special cross-bearing for any one to stand up in the London highways and by-ways to testify for Christ, and to call men to repentance and newness of life. Scoffs, jibes, and missiles might then have been encountered. It is very different now. Open-air preaching is not only a recognized institution, and protected by law, but it is also more than tolerated. Not that Secularists and Romanists do not occasionally object, dispute, and interrupt, but the great mass of the hearers are not with them.

The Bishop of London has more than once set an example to his clergy by preaching in the open air, and that in the plainest and simplest style. At Paddington Green, the whole of Monday, September 3d, was devoted to open-air preaching. It is believed that on this occasion ten thousand persons heard the gospel. The preaching was continued every evening during the week with marked spiritual results.

The London Cabmen's Lord's Day Rest Society is being attended with increasing usefulness and prosperity. The number of cab-masters who take out licenses only for six days, and consequently give rest and opportunities for public worship to their men on the Christian Sabbath, is steadily increasing. While in 1854 there were only 570 cabs with six days licenses, in 1860 they number 1465. At a recent meeting of the Society the successful writers of prize essays received the sums appropriated for that purpose. The first prize essay was written by a cab-driver when seated on his box at the respective cab-stands where he stopped.

There are now two daily prayer meetings in the city. There is a goodly attendance, and much fervor as well as simplicity in prayer. No one is formally, or by name, called on to pray: short prayers, with hymns intervening fill up the hour."

A letter from Spurgeon says:—"There is a good work going on in London, and the activity of the Christian Church is everywhere increasing. Just now the Primitive Methodists seem to be the most alive, and a brother of the name of Richard Weaver, a converted prize-fighter, who wears the alias of Undaunted Dick, is drawing large congregations every evening at St. Martin's Hall. The service is exciting, the preaching far from Calvinistic, the congregation of the poorest class, and the proceedings altogether of a singular character, but good is done, the lowest of the population are reached, and real earnestness is very evident in all that is undertaken. Christ is preached, and I therein rejoice, yea, and will rejoice.

"It is my firm belief that the salvation of London will not come from our colleges and seats of learning, but from her dens and haunts of poverty. I look for an army of converted sinners from St. Giles and Whitechapel, men whose fury in sin will be exchanged for energy in righteousness, whose gratitude for pardon will endow them with hearts of fire, and whose acquaintance with the language of the masses will give them tongues of fire. Books may educate ministers for the polite; only experience and study of men can prepare a man to touch the heart of the masses. We need preachers who will study not their shelves, but the streets and lanes, not paper and printing alone, but human nature in all its varied developments. The division between the ministry and the people is far too wide, they will never be moved by professional skill; the orator of the mass must be bone of their bone and flesh of their flesh. This is not attainable by any amount of research among our learned tomes. We must walk the hospitals, if we would be surgeons, and we must mingle with the people if we would reach their hearts. The language of the class-room is not the speech of the people, and if we would be understood, we must leave our high stilts behind us, and walk on their level, thinking and speaking as one of themselves. Do not imagine that I depreciate a regular education, on the other hand, I own its utility, but for the vast mass, something else is needed, and I have tried to indicate it."

The correspondent of the Presbyterian Banner, says of Wales:—"The revival of religion in Wales during the last twelve or eighteen months, has been very remarkable. It came suddenly and with power. Even the wicked were awed by its presence, and "fear fell upon every soul." While, however, many of these have returned to their besetting sins, and are serving Satan as before, there is a large number who have been gathered out of the world and into the Church of the living God. Thus at Carnarvon I was told that the accession to the communion of the different congregations was about four hundred souls. This is but a specimen of what is general—the rule and not the exception over both North and South Wales. The ministers, in large proportion, are gifted men—some of them have extraordinary power over the people's hearts in their public addresses."

There has been a very great religious interest in the town of Ryde, Isle of Wight, under the direction of the Wesleyan Methodists. The services were conducted by Dr. and Mrs. Palmer, two distinguished revivalists of that denomination belonging to this country.

The crowds drawn on Sabbath day have been unable to find accommodation, and immense audiences have gathered together every week night, Saturday excepted. A mid-day meeting for prayer, for the copious effusion of the Spirit of God, has also been encouragingly attended. Such an astonishing work of God has never been known in the Isle of Wight. In the short space of three weeks, no less than one hundred and ninety persons have sought and found redemption in the blood of Christ, even the forgiveness of sins. The service of Thursday, August 3d, was signalized by an extraordinary manifestation of the power of Christ to save.

Captain Sorzano, a Christian soldier in the service of Garibaldi, writes from Messina under the date of August 23d:

"All Sicily is free, and one might begin anywhere to sow the word of God, but I believe Palermo to be the best place, because it is the most civilized city in Sicily, and the most populous, containing about two hundred thousand inhabitants, and the lower orders can understand tolerably what is said. The field most open and most disposed to receive the seed of the word, is the military. None of them wish to have anything more to do with the priests, who on their side never go to visit the soldiers because they know there is no money to be had."

The Wife's Six Mile Walk.

In N. H—— lived Mr. and Mrs. B——. The husband was a rough, profane, wicked man, a despiser of the gospel of Christ, caring only for the things of this life. His wife was interested in the subject of religion, and at length, as she hoped, was led to embrace it.

After a time, she desired to make a public profession of her faith in Christ, and made known her wish to her impenitent husband, from whom she received some opposition, and a stern refusal to provide her a conveyance to the place where she wished to go for examination, which was about three miles distant, over long and rugged hills. When asked if he would furnish her with the horse and carriage, he roughly answered, "No; if you must go, you may go on foot; I shall not help you." She bore all with meekness, resolving to the same time that she would be steadfast in duty, and leave the event with God, also to make the effort to walk, even though it cost her pain, and her strength seemed so unequal to the task.

After attending to the wants of her little family, at an early hour in the afternoon she was on her way to the appointed place. At night she retraced her steps, and reached her home after a fatiguing walk of six miles over those weary hills, and prepared the evening meal, and retired to rest, but not without first imploring grace to help in her trials, and patience to endure, also that the heart of her husband might be softened, and that he might speedily experience the power of renewing grace.

He maintained the same coldness and dissatisfaction up to the hour for retiring, but the meek spirit of his wife, and her consistent, patient course, troubled him. He could not sleep; and in the still hours of the same night rose from his couch, and in bitterness of spirit walked his room, crying, "What must I do to be saved?"

The conflict was severe, but not long. He felt himself to be the chief of sinners, and was enabled soon to surrender all to Christ, and receive his love into his heart. His wife's strict and patient performance of duty, and her prayers, were the means which God blessed to his conversion. His oaths were laid aside, while prayer and praise dwelt upon his lips.

He soon became connected with the same church which his wife had joined, and has long been esteemed a man of prayer, and one of its most valued officers.

What an encouragement to christian decision and prayer! "Commit thy way unto the Lord, and he shall bring it to pass."—Amer. Messenger.

God knows it All.

In the dim recess of thy spirit's chamber
Is there some hidden grief thou may'st not tell?
Let not thy heart forsake thee; but remember
His pitying eye, who sees and knows it well.
God knows it all!

And art thou tossed on billows of temptation,
And wouldst do good, but evil oft prevails?
Oh think, amid the waves of tribulation,
When earthly hopes, when earthly refuge fails—
God knows it all!

And dost thou sin? thy deed of shame concealing
In some dark spot no human eye can see?
Then walk in pride, without one sigh revealing
The deep remorse that should disquiet thee!
God knows it all!

Art thou oppressed and poor and heavy-hearted,
The heavens above thee in thick clouds arrayed;
And well nigh crushed—no earthly strength imparted,
No friendly voice to say: "Be not afraid?"
God knows it all!

Art thou a mourner? are thy tear-drops flowing
For one too early lost to earth and thee?
The depths of grief no human spirit knowing,
Which moan is secret, like the moaning sea—
God knows it all!

Dost thou look back upon a life of sinning?
Forward, and tremble for thy future lot?
There's One who sees the End from the Beginning,
Thy tear of penitence is unforgot.
God knows it all!

Then go to God! Pour out your hearts before him!
There is no grief your Father cannot feel;
And let your grateful songs of praise adore him—
To save, forgive, and every wound to heal.
God knows it all—God knows it all!

An Incident.

"Go and do thou likewise."—Luke 10: 37.

At a morning prayer meeting held in this city, at the time of a recent autumnal convention, religion as connected with the business of life, received the following beautiful illustration. Several persons having spoken of the importance of holding religion in this connection, a gentleman arose and related his morning's experience in substance as follows:

At the place where he and some other guests, among whom was a clergyman, were entertained, the husband and father was absent. Breakfast being finished, the lady of the house remarked, "It is our custom at this stage in the proceedings of the day to attend prayers." Then, instead of asking the clergyman, or some other gentleman present to lead the devotions, she took the Bible, read a portion, and kneeling, in an earnest, yet humble manner, besought the divine blessing to rest upon all present during the business of the day.

Now, inquired the gentleman, who can doubt that the business of that family, so begun, will be religiously pursued this day?

This incident occurred in a family belonging, as I suppose, to a denomination not celebrated for remarkable fervency of spirit. Yet I wondered if a more touching exhibition of christian simplicity and devotion could be found among those who talk more of spirituality and experience than they.

May the number of such praying mothers and such religiously conducted households, greatly increase.—Herald of Gospel Liberty.—B. S. BATCHELOR.

Fulton Street Prayer Meeting.

Several conversions have taken place in connection with the services of the Fulton street prayer meeting, since their third anniversary on the twenty-third of September. On Monday of this week, a professor in one of the medical colleges of this city, a gentleman of high standing in his profession, and who, since the anniversary, has been a daily attendant upon the meeting, and had once risen and asked for prayers for his own conversion, arose and stated in a few brief words, what a miracle of grace he had become, even to himself. He had been brought from a state of infidelity to a state of the most implicit faith in the revealed will of God in the Holy Bible. He had been brought to believe in Christ as his only Savior. At first the light was small and feeble, but it had shone more and more brightly, and now he had a most rejoicing assurance that his sins were forgiven.

"Now," said he, "if any of you should ask me how I came to be anxious about my soul, I have this to answer, I have a praying mother, one of the best of women; that mother's prayers, and your prayers have been answered, as I humbly trust, in my salvation."

Little Children's Dresses.—Naked Arms and Neck.

A distinguished physician, who died some years since in Paris, declared: "I believe that during the twenty-six years I have practiced my profession in this city, twenty thousand children have been carried to the cemeteries, a sacrifice to the absurd custom of exposing their arms naked."

I have often thought if a mother were anxious to show the soft, white skin of her baby, and would cut out a round hole in the little thing's dress, just over the heart, and then carry it about for observation by the company, it would do very little harm. But to expose the baby's arms, members so far removed from the heart, and with such feeble circulation at best, is a most pernicious practice.

Put the bulb of a thermometer in a baby's mouth; the mercury rises to 90 degrees. Now carry the same bulb to its little hand; if the arms be bare, and the evening cool, the mercury will sink 40 degrees. Of course all the blood which flows through these arms and hands must fall from 20 to 40 degrees below the temperature of the heart. Need I say that when these cold currents of blood flow back into the chest, the child's general vitality must be more or less compromised? And need I add that we ought not to be surprised at its frequently recurring affections of the lungs, throat, and stomach?

I have seen more than one child with habitual cough and hoarseness, or choking with mucus, entirely and permanently relieved by simply keeping its arms and hands warm. Every observing and progressing physician has daily opportunities to witness the same simple cure.

COLD FEET.—If you have cold feet, immerse them morning and evening in cold water, rub with a rough towel, and run about your room till they burn. In one month you will be entirely relieved. All these red-pepper and mustard applications are like rum to the stomach, relieve you to-day, but leave you colder to-morrow.

Checking Perspiration.

A Boston merchant, in "lending a hand" on board of one of his ships on a windy day, found himself at the end of an hour and a half pretty well exhausted and perspiring freely. He sat down to rest. The cool wind from the sea was delightful, and engaging in conversation, time passed faster than he was aware of. In attempting to rise, he found he was unable to do so without assistance. He was taken home and put to bed, where he remained two years; and for a long time afterwards could only hobble about with the aid of a crutch. Less exposures than this have, in constitutions not so vigorous, resulted in inflammation of the lungs, "pneumonia," ending in death in less than a week, or causing [illegible] rheumatisms, to be a source of torture [illegible] a lifetime.

Multitudes of lives would be saved every year, and an incalculable amount of human suffering would be prevented, if parents would begin to explain to their children at the age of three or four years, the danger which attends cooling off too quickly after exercise, and the importance of not standing still after exercise, or work, or play, or of remaining exposed to a wind, or of sitting at open window or door, or of pulling off any garment, even the hat or bonnet, while in a heat. It should be remembered by all, that a cold never comes without a cause, and that in four times out of five, it is the result of leaving off exercise too suddenly or of remaining still in the wind, or in a cooler atmosphere than that in which the exercise has been taken.

The colder the weather the more need is there, in coming into the house, to keep on all the clothing, except India-rubber or damp shoes, for several minutes afterwards. It is not necessary that the perspiration be visible; any exercise which excites the circulation beyond what is natural, causes a proportional increase of perspiration, the sudden checking of which induces dangerous diseases and certain death every day.—Dr. Hall.

Singular Physiological Facts.

It is impossible to think large, manly, beautiful, virtuous thoughts, while respiring in an atmosphere of stagnation and consequent corruption. People who sleep in close, ill-ventilated rooms, are forever dreaming a set of monotonous dreams, loaded with vicious pictures, and animated by strangers or demons made from the confined air. Idiots breathe superficially. They seldom respire like an intelligent mind. Timid persons inhale small quantities of air. The coward has a narrow chest, and he only uses the upper portion of his lungs. If a blacksmith is about to lift a heavy hammer, or strike a hard blow, he will (unthinkingly) expand and fill his lungs to their utmost capacity. Why does the strongest horse always have the broadest and deepest chest? The mind cannot expand and improve, morally or intellectually, unless the lungs be large, full, and constantly and plentifully supplied with air, fresh from the vintage of immensity. No high and magnificent conceptions can be obtained in a confined atmosphere. Mountainous air is essential to mountainous thoughts. The atmosphere is indispensable to spiritual expansion."

SWEET.—The digestive organs cannot dispose of large quantities of sugar. Health demands very little of either sweet or sour. Children do not need more sweet than is contained in the milk and fruit they everywhere naturally consume.

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,
Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year	$2 00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months	15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for three months for 50 cents, which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of brethren, they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Watch and Pray.

Little causes, light as air,
Seeming but a mote,
Bring the darkest days of care,
Through which mortals grope;
Nor alone confined to blast
Life's poor little span,
But their baleful shadows cast
Far beyond its ken.

Then with cautious steps press on,
Where frail bridges span
The dark wave of life, for home
Lies beyond the stream.
Still o'er th' enchanted ground
Lies thy lonely way,
Where the tempter prowls around,
Thou must watch and pray.

And when thou hast safely past,
Counting one by one
Every danger but the last,
Still there's one to come:
And in sight of Eden bowers,
Almost in the goal,
Mid the perfume of its flowers,
Watch! for thou may'st fall.

"The Death and Resurrection of Jesus Christ."

A LECTURE BY WM. GLEN MONCRIEFF, LONDON, C. W.

Being a reply to the Westminster Review, No. 135, Article 5.
Delivered before the Young Men's Christian Instruction Society of London, March, 1860.

II. We come now to consider briefly the PROOF THAT JESUS ROSE FROM THE DEAD.

A resurrection is an astonishing event, yet it involves no contradiction. The Author of life can, if he deems it wise, rekindle the flame. There are things of which it is safe to affirm that they can never appear within the confines of the possible; such as, a rainbow in the absence of light, and a circle the diameter of which shall be greater than its circumference. But the human mind too frequently rests not contented with excluding the contradictory; in many instances that which now forms a portion of the actual, and facts to awaken surprise, was for years enrolled under the head of impossibilities. Indeed, among the many valuable lessons taught as the ages move forward is this one;—to be remarkably cautious in affirming what has not been, and what cannot be. Any morning the pompous oracle may find to his humiliation, that the wildest fancies have become sober realities. Even the wonders of nature have ceased to be marvelous, merely because they are familiar; but if any one should, for the first time, be presented with an egg and told that out of such came yon Condor floating above the Andes and the clouds; or an acorn, and informed that similar was the origin of the oak under whose wide-spreading branches the conversation was held, and it seems to me inevitable, that the hearer would rotate his neck in hopeless skepticism.

The resurrection of Jesus Christ was a singular phenomenon, yet not altogether unexampled in anterior authentic history. Though extremely singular, though an event by no means likely to occur, let us admit with candor that evidence could make it credible by the human intellect. Affirm that no amount of evidence can establish it, and then have we not dogmatism as to proof exactly analogous to the ostracised dogmatism as to fact? We admit that the more extraordinary the occurrence, the more ample and the more cogent the proof must be: but to exclude any fact or incident from the archives of terrestrial history by simply declaring it incapable of confirmation by human testimony, is to trample on the first axioms of a sound philosophy, and to beggar the world by contracting the bounds of legitimate inquiry.

Our Lord was buried in the manner already described; and we are now waiting for the issues of the third day, so frequently condescended on by himself. Let us picture the scene. We find ourselves in a garden outside of the ancient city, about four o'clock in the morning: from the west the moon is flooding the hills and vallies with its mellow beams; many strangers are sleeping beneath the olive trees, or on the open ground, for the passover has brought myriads to Jerusalem, who can obtain no accommodation within its limits. There, a little way in the distance, is the rocky tomb in which the Savior reclines, closely enveloped in the linen and the shades of death: what an immense stone is placed against the door—ten men are likely unable to shift it from its seat. But we dare not approach nearer the sepulchre, for a band of stern Roman soldiers, armed to the teeth, have charge of the tomb, and defy mortal to touch the seal: their swords and helmets glisten in the moonbeams, and we distinctly hear the tramp of sentry on his beat. Some of the guards are leaning against the rock; others are engaged in conversation while reclining on the grass. Every eye is vigilant; every hand ready for a soldier's work. Friend or foe steal the body in these circumstances! As well may we conceive an infant lifting the stone, and pitching it into the Mediterranean, some forty miles away. But lo! what a blaze of light suddenly bursts forth close to the sepulchre; all around is illumined as by day. The keepers rush from their posts, but, overcome with terror, drop like men suddenly struck dead. Enveloped in light more beautiful than the morning, an angelic being, of majestic stature, rolls aside the stone without an effort, and Jesus leaves the vault clothed with the radiance of health and the grandeur of immortal being. "The Lord has risen indeed."—Let us return to the city and meditate in our hearts on the glorious events of which we have been spectators.

The Reviewer gives no explanation of this celestial ambassador: had he done so he probably would have delivered himself to the effect, that instead of an angel from heaven, it was an eagle from the mountains of Lebanon, which had come to sharpen his bill in Joseph's garden; and that during the alarm of the soldiers, Jesus, who had been re-animated by the cordials, pushed open the door and made his exit. After the same manner we doubt not this literary worthy would maintain that the transfiguration was done by moonshine; the thousands said to have been miraculously supplied were biologized into the conviction that they had eaten their dinner; and every other Biblical phenomenon would be accounted for with equal skill.

It was not suitable to the Reviewer's ends to exhibit the fact, that when some of the watch fled into the city, and reported what had occurred on Joseph's property, the high priests and elders bribed them to affirm that while they slept the disciples of Jesus came by night and stole him away. Here were two gross blunders which his enemies committed. (1.) In supposing that the disciples of Jesus could have any motive, by stealing his body, to feign that he had been resurrected, when they never understood him to affirm that he would rise again. (2.) Another blunder was in making the soldiers testify as to what occurred while they were asleep. The poor men were corruptible, but it was disgraceful for the hierarchy to convert them into fools. In spite of the exertion of the officials, the truth was disclosed, for the whole company had not been bribed; and the rest of them would unquestionably dilate on the prodigy, and, as heathens, most likely rejoice at the interposition of the Gods, as they would explain events, on behalf of one, who had been inhumanly treated by his own countrymen. Unfortunately for their cause, the priests neglected to tie the other tongues with the golden chain: their loss, however, was the world's profit.

In estimating the evidence for the resurrection of Jesus Christ, it must never be forgotten that the chosen witnesses—the eleven Apostles—were the most incredulous of men. Nothing but ocular and tangible demonstration had any effect on their minds. Thomas was not convinced till his Master said to him:—"Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands; and reach hither thy hand and thrust it into my side; and be not faithless, but believing." Their very doubts—their extreme caution—their lack of confidence in each other's word when the burden of the speech was, "the Lord is risen": all these circumstances mightily enhance the truth of their individual and conjoint asseverations.

And here it seems judicious to press the fact into notice, that the resurrection of Jesus was a literal and not a spiritual one: he appeared as the conqueror of the grave, not a shadowy, impalpable thing; on the contrary, he was no less tangible than before his death. As we have just noted, he invited Thomas to handle him, and so gather assurance that he was no apparition: on another occasion he said to his disciples who were alarmed by his sudden entrance into their company: "handle me, and see, for a spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have."

Some inconsiderate Christian writers have contended that the resurrection body of Jesus was etherial; and taking advantage of this admission, the Reviewer insists that identification was a hopeless matter to his friends. The impalpability, or non-materiality, is based on the imaginary fact that he, on several instances, passed through doors and walls, after the manner of heat and the electric fluid. But the sacred writers never declared that he passed through these solid obstacles. We read that he unexpectedly stood in their midst, the doors being shut for fear of the Jews; but surely though the doors were locked, he who could quell the storm, and reanimate the dead, must have found it an easy matter to make a bolt retire, and a door turn on its hinges. In this way, we apprehend, his entrance was effected; and no more miracle was required.

"A marked and most significant peculiarity in these accounts, which has not received the attention it deserves, is, that scarcely any of those who are said to have seen Jesus after his resurrection recognized him, though long and intimately acquainted with his person. 'After that he appeared in another form to two of them.' Now, if it really were Jesus who appeared to these various parties, would this want of recognition have been possible? If it were Jesus, he was so changed that his most intimate friends did not know him. How then can we know it was himself?"

In answer to all this, I have to submit three remarks. First,—those to whom he first presented himself had not the least expectation of seeing him: not one friend appears to have had faith in his resurrection, though, as already noticed, he repeatedly foretold it during his ministry. His enemies, it is a singular fact, understood him well; and knowing the import of his words, determined to show how great an impostor he was. Secondly. There must have been an immense change in his appearance after his resurrection: he awoke not as he fell asleep on Calvary. His disciples remembered him as weary, now he was vigorous; they remembered him as "the man of sorrows," now his eye was radiant with heavenly joy; they remembered him as "more marred than any man," now they beheld a countenance from which every wrinkle was banished; they remembered him a child of mortality, he now stood before them in the loveliness of perennial existence. He appeared first to Mary, and she did not recognize him:—the outward was transformed; but so soon as his voice filled her ears, she knew him at once. "Jesus saith unto her, Mary"—it sounded just as it had lovingly sounded before—"She turned and saith unto him, Master." The human voice comes loaded with character: the visage alters with years and health; but the tone of the speech outlives the external signs of identity. "The voice," said the venerable Isaac, "is the voice of Jacob, but the hands are the hands of Esau."

Finally, though they had some difficulty in recognizing him at first, they were all at length perfectly convinced that it was the same Jesus who on divers occasions, within forty days, presented himself before them. Not one attendant, and they were a skeptical band, pronounced the evidence of identity insufficient, and, as a natural result, withheld homage from him who claimed to be his risen Lord. With one heart they loved him supremely: with one voice they paid him reverence; and if they, with such opportunities for examination, were satisfied of his identity, the demand is not unreasonable that we, so far down time, should repose confidence in their testimony.

"Reasons for my Hope."

The following is from Bro. Hasting's interesting work, entitled, "REASONS FOR MY HOPE." Every lover of truth should have a copy.—ED.

Again, the question recurs, "WHERE ARE WE?" Not under Babylonish rule—that is gone—not under Persian tyranny, that has passed away—not under Grecian government, for Grecia is no longer an empire—not under mighty and imperial Rome, for that is divided and broken into fragments. The ten kingdoms have arisen—the other little one has also come up and done its appointed work; and what comes next? The throne of judgment! the destruction of the beast by burning flame! the appearing of Christ in glory and majesty! and the everlasting kingdom of God established on the earth! Three of these four great empires have passed away, the fourth is in its last, its divided stage, and the voices of providence and of prophecy alike unite to proclaim, "Repent, for the kingdom of God is at HAND!" All things verge onward to this glorious day when, says the prophet, "The KINGDOM and DOMINION, and the greatness of the kingdom UNDER THE WHOLE HEAVEN, shall be given to the people of the SAINTS of the Most High, whose kingdom is an EVERLASTING KINGDOM, and all dominions shall SERVE and OBEY HIM." Dan. 7: 27. • • • • •

The angel of the Lord, having led the prophet Daniel through a brief but graphic narration of the events of note in the history of the ages past, beginning with those just then transpiring beneath his gaze, and going down to the latter days, informed him that at "the time of the end," a certain mighty power or potentate should run through a course of conquest and victory, until at the conclusion, "He shall go forth with great fury to destroy, and utterly to make away many. And he shall plant the tabernacles of his palace between the seas in the glorious holy mountain; yet he shall come to his end, and none shall help him. And at that time shall Michael stand up, the great prince which standeth for the children of thy people: and there shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation even to that same time: and at that time thy people shall be DELIVERED, every one that shall be found written in the book. And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall AWAKE, some to EVERLASTING LIFE, and some to shame and everlasting contempt. And they that be wise shall SHINE as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the STARS for EVER AND EVER."—Dan. 11: 44, 45; 12: 1–3.

Now it is quite evident that the end of this series of events is in connection with the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ and the resurrection of the dead. To apply it to mere temporal deliverances is to make the prophets speak great swelling words, which have but little force or meaning. It also seems quite plain that this "glorious holy mountain" is Mount Zion, or Jerusalem, which is "between the seas,"—the dead sea being on the east and the Mediterranean on the west of it. Now I do not see that this prediction has ever yet received its accomplishment; but from the attention with which the great European powers are viewing what is termed the "Eastern question," from the rising importance of the Jewish people, and the peculiar interest that is awakened in that nation; its representatives holding the purse-strings of the world; it seems to me exceedingly probable that before long we shall see a Ruler taking possession of that land and planting there the "tabernacles of his palace," and then suddenly and unexpectedly shall the terrors of Armageddon roll in upon the view. I cannot predict with positiveness, I am no prophet, but it seems to me exceedingly probable that these events may very soon be realized. And if so, then I have another reason for my hope.

The same angel, after describing the resurrection of those that sleep in the dust of the earth, and the glorification of the people of God, who shall "shine as the stars forever and ever," continued thus: "But thou, O Daniel, shut up the words, and SEAL THE BOOK, even to the TIME OF THE END: many shall RUN TO AND FRO, and KNOWLEDGE SHALL BE INCREASED."—Dan. 12: 4. Now it cannot be denied that there has been, during the last half century, an increase of knowledge entirely unparalleled in all the history of the world.

If we regard this increase of knowledge as having respect to this very prophecy, and to the understanding of the word of God; if like Michælis, we say, "Many shall give their sedulous attention to the understanding of these things,"—or, with A. Clarke, "Many shall endeavor to search out the sense, and knowledge shall be increased by these means," or with Dr. Coke, "Many shall run to and fro . . . earnestly searching into this sealed book, and knowledge shall be increased; light shall be cast on the prophecies; . . . they will be clear as if written with a sunbeam:" if with Dr. Gill we say, "Many shall be stirred up to inquire into these things; . . . the knowledge of this book of prophecy will be increased; things will appear plainer the nearer the accomplishment of them,"—if this be the sense and scope of the passage, surely such knowledge has greatly increased.

Said Sir Isaac Newton, "It is a part of this prophecy that it should not be understood before the last age of the world; and therefore it makes for the credit of the prophecy that it is not yet understood; but if the last age, the age of opening these things be now approaching, (as by the great success of late interpreters it seems to be,) we have more encouragement than ever to look into these things. But in the very end the prophecy shall be so far interpreted as to convince many, 'for then,' says Daniel, 'many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased.' . . . Among the interpreters of the last age, there is scarce one of note who hath not made some discovery worth knowing; whence I seem to gather that God is about opening these mysteries."*

A generation later than this, in 1775, the sainted Fletcher of Madely, writing on this subject, said: "It is remarkable that more books have been written upon the prophecies these last hundred years, than were ever known before, and all—those, at least, which I have read—agree that these things will, in all probability, soon come upon the earth. I know many have been grossly mistaken as to the years; but because they were rash, shall we be stupid? Because they said 'to-day,' shall we say never? and cry 'peace, peace,' when we should look about us with eyes full of expectation? Let us not judge rashly, nor utter vain predictions in the name of the Lord; but let us look about us with watchful eyes, lest the enemy take advantage of us. . . . If we are mistaken in forming conjectures, . . . if these things happen not to us, but to our children, (as they most certainly will, before the third generation is swept away,) is it not our business to prepare ourselves for them?" † etc.

If more books had been written on the prophecies during that century than were ever known before, is it not true that more, far more, have been written in the last half century than all that were written previously? The volumes which were issued in Fletcher's time, cannot be compared with the multitudes of more recent issue. It would require a volume to catalogue the works on prophecy that have leaped from the press during the last generation, from such writers as Cumming, Croly, Keith, Begg, Brooks, Birks, Bickersteth, McNeil, Elliott, Maitland, Wolffe, and others in England; the Bonars, McCheyne, Candlish, Chalmers, Gilfillan, and Cunninghame in Scotland; Gaussen, Hengstenburg, Olshausen, and others upon the continent and in America, from Drs. Duffield, Ramsey, Lord, Tyng, Hopkins; also Messrs. Winthrop, D. N. Lord, D. T. Taylor, and others far too numerous to mention.‡

Besides these there are hundreds and thousands who have studied and are preaching upon the prophecies, who have never written on the subject. And many of them are men second to none of their compeers in the pulpit, or on the platform. Men of eloquence like Chalmers, and Melville, and Cumming, and Spurgeon, and Tyng, and Burnham; men of learning like Elliot, and Lord, and Wolffe; men of the deepest piety like McCheyne, and Hewettson, and J. K. Lord; men of the highest and the lowest grade, from bishops and princes, down to farmers and artisans,—men in all countries where the Bible is studied—men whose tongues and pens are both "like a pen of a ready writer," have independently, and often unknown to each other, united in lavishing their learning and their eloquence upon the exposition of those unfolding oracles, that are adapted to human necessities in these last times of peril and of sin.

But perhaps by some, this prediction may be regarded as having a more extended application, and so embracing all Scriptural knowledge. And if it be in this respect that knowedge was to be increased, how accurately and gloriously has the prediction been accomplished.

If we go back to the days of Christ, we find the Old Testament existing only in the original Hebrew and in the Greek translation called the Septuagint, made by order of Ptolemy Philadelphus, B. C. about 288. About one hundred years from the birth of Christ, the New Testament writings were completed, the last being added by the Apostle John. The Christian church of the first age had only the Bible in Hebrew and in Greek. The gift of tongues aided in its dissemination among different nations, but the necessity of versions was speedily felt. The work was begun perhaps under the eye, and in the days of the Apostles, by the translation of the New Testament into the (Peshito) Syriac language. In the first ten centuries of the Christian era the Bible was translated into as many different tongues:—Chaldee, Greek, Syriac, Latin, Egyptian, Ethiopic, Armenian, Gothic, Sclavonic, Arabic, and, perhaps, Anglo-Saxon; and some thousands of copies probably were transcribed by hand. This with a French version, made in the twelfth century, an English one in the fourteenth, and in the fifteenth an Italian version, and one in Spanish, was all that was done for the Bible during about fifteen hundred years from the time of Christ. Ten versions in ten hundred years, and then four versions during five hundred years of darkness succeeding. Books were then written with the pen, and in England, in 1429, Nicholas Belward was arraigned for purchasing a New Testament for four marks and four pence, and teaching William Wright and Margery his wife, the study of the same. This price would be equal to about £45. 6s. 8d, or about two hundred and twenty-five dollars for a NEW TESTAMENT. How precious must the word of God have been then.*

Sacramental Hymn.

We come with joyful hearts to-day,
For Christ, our Friend, is near;
We cast our griefs and fears away,
For lo! our help is here.

Here, in His love and promise stored,
Are comforts rich and sweet;
Here, in his sacrament and word,
Our Savior we can meet.

Now, fear and gloom to joy give place,
Now, are our sorrows o'er—
Since God hath made us, in his grace,
His children evermore.

Oh! rich the gifts thou bringest us,
Thyself made poor and weak;
Oh! love beyond compare, that thus
Can foes and sinners seek!

We raise on high a gladsome voice
For this, to Thee alone,
And evermore with thanks rejoice
Before thy glorious throne.

For the Crisis.

Trying to be an Angel.

The Berlin correspondent of the Daily Telegraph relates the following circumstance:—

"A little girl had been quite melancholy for about a year after the death of a near relative. One day, when her parents were absent, she wrote on her slate:—'I'm sure you will be very glad to hear I am going to be an angel. Aunt Emma told me last Sunday that people would die if they shut themselves up in a room with burning coals, and she also said this was an easy death. I am now doing what she told me. Good bye, dear parents, I have become an angel.' Her parents immediately set about the work of resuscitation, and succeeded in saving their little girl from becoming 'an angel.'"

There, isn't that a pretty batch of theology to cram into a little girl's head? That is the simple, concentrated, practical essence of such hymns as

"Death is the gate to endless joy,"
"Angels shout a child is born," death is

"But the voice that Jesus sends,"

and all those miserable relics of satan's original falsehood, "ye shall not surely die."

This girl was simply consistent and honest. I fear older people are neither in some of their notions. They believe the same, but they will not practice it. We may say to them as Lemuel Haynes did to the Universalist preacher who was brought by one of his parishioners to visit him. "Ah!" said Mr. H., "you are the man that preaches that men may lie, steal, cheat, drink, murder, and commit all manner of sins, and yet go to heaven, are you?" "No," said the Universalist indignantly, "I don't preach any such thing." "Ah, well," said Haynes, "You believe it, don't you?" So with this class; they maynot preach that persons should do as the girl did, but they believe, Spiritualists especially, that these results will follow the event of death.

A pan of charcoal to make an angel! Quite a cheap mode. One coal pit would produce coal enough to people a small heaven! Alas! that men should so pervert the truth. Death is put in the place of Jesus Christ. Death is made a deliverer, a great translator, a redeemer, and so the curse denounced by the Lord as "the wages of sin," comes to be glorified to the dishonor of God and the defeat of the objects of his law. Death is but a terror and a monster. Sickness and pain, disease and death, all spring from SIN. They are all wrong, and none but the sinful and the guilty, those who belong to a sinful race, partake of these evils. Sin and death go hand in hand. When there is no more sin, there shall be no more pain, sorrow, sighing or DEATH.

But this men will not believe. They must have glory in death instead of after death. So they talk of spheres and sing of spirit-lands, and now and then a Spiritualist drowns himself, as a man did in Philadelphia, to get into the spheres—takes laudanum, as a girl in Boston did when the spirits foretold her death; or, like the case in hand, sets up business with a pan of charcoal, and undertakes to become an angel! May the Lord pity the blind guides, and open the eyes of his people to learn of Christ. For "in him was light, and the light was the LIFE OF MEN."

For the Crisis.

"Son, Remember!"

Although in our fallen world, that unfortunate class of mortals called infidels is fearfully numerous, yet the greater portion of civilized human beings profess to believe in a future state of rewards and punishments. But with many, alas! it is only profession; for while the infinite Jehovah has plainly laid down his plan of operation with mankind in his revealed word, showing his requirements, a great proportion pass through their state of probation with perfect indifference, without taking the trouble to inform themselves of their obligation to their rightful Sovereign, seemingly satisfied with the simple theory that there is a God, a heaven and hell, a kind of destiny awaiting the human family, of weal or wo, or something else, they know not what, and yet in their ignorance vainly hoping that in the end all will be well. Although this is the true condition of unhappy thousands around us, yet we would endeavor, if possible, to arouse the attention of some such to the important fact, that there is a time approaching in their history when all the faculties of the soul will become fearfully alive, and quickened with an energy heretofore unsought for and unknown. In particular the memory, that power of the human mind so long neglected and abused, will now become wonderfully sensitive; the long catalogue of crime committed in the lifetime of the finally impenitent sinner, which he vainly supposed buried in oblivion, will now come up before him in living remembrance, augmenting his mingled cup of despair, as they continue one by one to witness against him.

No accusation of crime was brought against the rich man, who died and in hell lifted up his eyes being in torment, by the compassionate Abraham; and when perhaps for the first time he became alive to the necessity of prayer, and cried to father Abraham to "have mercy upon him," and send Lazarus, that he might dip the tip of his finger in water, and cool his parched tongue, being tormented in the flame; and though his prayer, now so entirely sincere, was wholly rejected, yet he was not met with rebuke or scorn, but simply told,—"Son, remember!" yes, "remember that thou in thy lifetime receivedst thy good things, and likewise Lazarus evil things; but now he is comforted and thou art tormented." Thus memory was made the only accuser of that unhappy man, who in his lifetime was clothed in purple and fine linen, and fared sumptuously every day, forgetful of the poor afflicted man that lay at his gate full of sores, with only the more merciful dogs for his companions, and to whom when he had lingered out his painful existence, angels were sent to convey to Abraham's bosom, the home of the blest.

How full of instruction to the human family this touching lesson of the Savior. There will be no need of a greater punishment to the condemned criminal than his own conscience, awakened to the mournful fact that heaven and happiness he has lost by his willful neglect, and the hell and misery he has obtained, are the just fruits of his doings. O, then, may those who are blindly and daringly rushing forward to the time when the Lord will bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and will make manifest the counsels of the heart, hasten to make suitable preparation for the "great and notable day of the Lord," when only those who in their lifetime have exercised repentance toward God, and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, will be able to stand.

For the Crisis.

Exposition of 1 Tim. 4: 10.

"For therefore we both labor and suffer reproach, because we trust in the living God, who is the Savior of all men, especially of those that believe."

We cheerfully "labor" and patiently "suffer reproach" and other present evils, consequent on our devotion to Jesus Christ, because we trust in the living God, who saves all men continually from temporal evils, seen and unseen, "especially those who believe."

The judges of Israel, who, instrumentally, saved the people from temporal calamities, were called "Saviors." Neh. 9: 27. The Father of mercies openeth his hand and "supplieth the wants of every living thing;" thus saving from death. He "sendeth his rain on the just and on the unjust, and is kind to the unthankful and the evil." His hand, though unseen, and ungratefully disregarded, shields the wicked from innumerable dangers.

But a covenant keeping God exercises a special guardianship over his loving and believing children. The 91st Psalm is a beautiful illustration of this fact, which should inspire the unwavering confidence of every child of God, in his Father's providential care and love. "He that dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty. A thousand shall fall at thy side, and ten thousand at thy right hand, but it shall not come nigh thee," etc. H. GRANT.

"Go ye out into the Highways and Hedges."

To those interested in our Mission Sunday School, I will say, the Lord is prospering us beyond our expectations. Yes, he is better to us than all our fears. We have already seen happy results, praise the Lord! We started our school with nine children; now we have fifty-eight. Some have no mother, some have no father, some have drunken fathers, others have good parents, but one or the other is sick. What now can be done? Shall we let them go? No, the Lord will provide for them, if he sends Elijah's raven, with a garment in his beak. To be sure, the Lord in whom we trust is mighty. We have scholars from five to sixteen years of age. Four of them went forward for prayers last Sunday. The church here have been very low, but God in his mercy has blessed the labors of our dear Bro., P. C. Rodman, of Peace Dale, to an awakening of the church. There is a blessed union prevailing now, thanks be to God. Pray for us, brethren and sisters, especially for the school.

I am very busy, and have many letters which should be answered, but cannot get time. I will say, however, to those dear ones who have written to me and expressed much sympathy, your letters have been appreciated. I trust you will be willing to take this as an answer to yours, and not count it to me as neglect on my part towards you.

Some of these children are very poor, and it takes all the spare time I have to make garments for them. I have to-day made up the last garment of my own which I have to spare. There are ten more to clothe. Now if I had that old dress skirt that sister has laid by, I could work it over and make a cape or cloak for a little girl of ten years old, who has none. Or, if I had those old boots or shoes that George and Mary have outgrown, they might fit some of these little children and make their hearts glad.

Some of the church with myself have drained our closets, and are now looking unto God and trusting in him for future needs. And it will come. Yes, I never undertook a work in the name of the Lord, that did not prosper. May God bless "Geo. and Mary E——" for that dollar, it shall be used prudently. And that sister in Yarmouth, Me., who also sent a dollar. I have not yet used it, for I am waiting to see how I can best glorify God with it. There are quite a number of little girls and boys who need almost everything for an outfit. But think I shall wait a few days until I get the bundle of clothing that Sister A. or B. is going to send, then I can take the money and get what is necessary, and so make everything go as far as possible. I wish I had another "Dorcas" here, to make clothing for the poor. I could get out scores of poor people within a week to fill the Lord's house. I expect a mighty outpouring of His Spirit in the highways and hedges this winter, if the Lord does not come before spring. Is Sister M. Mathews at liberty this winter? If so, would she like to work in the highways and hedges? Will she be so kind as to give me her address?

May God bless you, dear pilgrims, and fit you for the speedy coming of Christ. Come, children, go work in the Lord's vineyard. The harvest is great, b t where, oh! where are the real laborers?

I will here acknowledge the reception of another kind letter from Sister N——. God bless you, sister, for that dollar, and the Bro. H. L. Hastings to whom you wished the money given, if I did not succeed, is none other than my dear husband and companion in tribulation, and my "true name" is HATTIE B. HASTINGS.

Providence, R. I., Nov. 11th, 1860.

P. S. Sr. A—— of T——, is informed that her letter and package barrel is received. Many thanks! It made my heart glad to open the package. I had eleven children so fit out and the package came in good time. May God bless Sr. D—— and the others for their kindness.

Persons sending parcels should direct to H. L. Hastings, Providence, R. I.

To the Disconsolate.

"But as truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the LORD."—Num. 14: 21.

It would have seemed to all human appearances that the design of the Almighty was frustrated in consequence of the rebellion of the Israelites, by their refusal to cross the Jordan and take possession of the land of Canaan. But not so. God declared to Moses that all the earth should be filled with his glory. What a glorious declaration, confirmed by his oath, which is immutable, that "we might have strong consolation, who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us." How heart-cheering, how soul-reviving to the wayworn pilgrim as he plods his weary way through this sin-cursed earth, buffeted by the enemy, scorned by the world, persecuted by a scoffing church, and contumely heaped upon him by the enemies of the second coming of Christ. Bless the Lord, none of these things can move his heart, or turn his eye of faith from the things which God has promised to them that love him.

What a glorious prospect rises up before the christian! With his eye of faith fixed upon Christ, his elder brother, and his heart trusting in Israel's God, he need not fear what man may do. Soon will the oath and promise of God to his waiting church be realized; very soon will the sleeping ones awake, and the living shall be changed from mortal to immortality. O, joyful morn! when the curse shall be removed, sin banished, death destroyed, earth restored, and the saints redeemed. Then "the ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads: they shall obtain joy and gladness; sorrow and sighing shall flee away."

"O, hail, happy day!"

No more shall be heard the roll of the drum beating to arms, nor the clarion's blast calling the warrior to the gory battle-field to stain his hands in the blood of his fellow man. No more shall be heard the thundering of artillery, the rattle of the musketry, or the sharp crack of the rifle, belching forth fire and smoke, vomiting out deadly hail, strewing the plain with the dead and dying. No more shall be heard the clash of steel as foeman rushes on foeman in deadly strife. For "he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people; and they shall beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." Then shall the voice of the oppressor be hushed, and the bondman go free, for, "Thus saith the Lord." "And my people shall dwell in a peaceful habitation, and in sure dwellings, and in quiet resting places." "Thine eyes shall see Jerusalem a quiet habitation." King Jesus will rule in righteousness, and, "all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord." With such a prospect before us, we may exclaim with the beloved John, "Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus." Yours looking for speedy deliverance.

Smoke of Torment and Unquenchable Fire Explained.

BRO. GRANT:—I have just had printed a tract of eight pages with this caption, believing it will be called for and read by new readers, as to our views, and lead some of them to see how they have been wrongly taught and honestly deceived by the common explanations of these and other symbolic terms. The above texts are generally quoted as full proof of endless misery, but I think I make it plain in this tract, that "smoke of their torment" (Rev. 14: 11,) can mean only earthly judgments; and that all the passages in which "unquenchable fire," "fire shall not be quenched," are used, when examined together, form the strongest proof that can be found in the Bible to prove the utter destruction of the finally impenitent. The reason is, that the Holy Spirit has explained twelve, out of fourteen of the passages, in which these terms are found, to mean utter destruction, and give no intimation that the other two mean anything different. In explaining Rev. 14: 11, we have to show how forever and ever and everlasting, are used in Scripture, and I quote Prof. Stewart to prove they are often used in a limited sense.

As this tract is on good and heavy paper, it is worth $1 per one hundred, and two cents single; but if $1 is sent, I will send one hundred, and prepay the postage, or send fifty or twenty-five at the same rate. We should have more cheap, pointed tracts on this subject spread broad-cast.

I have also a supply of my tract on the word hell, and will send both to the Crisis office where they can be had at wholesale I find it necessary to request brethren who have had and sold my book, to send pay as soon as consistent—I am more than commonly plagued for means this fall. Those owing me East, if they can pay, may send it to Bro. Grant, stating it is for me. I shall be at home for a month to come.

The Religion of Paying Debts.

Men may sophisticate as they please. They can never make it right, and all the bankrupt laws in the universe can never make it right, for them not to pay their debts. There is a sin in this neglect as clear and as deserving church discipline as in stealing, or false swearing. He who violates his promise to pay, or withholds the payment of a debt when it is in his power to meet his engagement, ought to be made to feel that in the sight of all honest men he is a swindler. Religion may be a very comfortable cloak under which to hide, but if religion does not require a man to deal justly, it is not worth having.—Selected.

INDIAN SUMMER.—The Indian summer, that unclassified asteroid struck off from the corners of the regular seasons, and revolving in its own independent orbit between autumn and winter, is upon us with all its gorgeousness and glory. It dwells in the warm, smoky atmosphere, it whispers in the eddying currents that rustle the red and yellow leaves along garden walks; it sits behind the purple curtains that drape the distant hill-tops. Out in the country the orchards are fragrant with smell of apples and cider, and the forests blush beneath the rays of the October sun, like garments dyed in blood. There is no season, so sweet and delicious as the Indian Summer.—Ex.

Discussion.

We have arranged to hold a discussion with Adin Ballou, at the City Hall, in Worcester, Mass., Tuesday and Wednesday, Nov. 27th and 28th. We are to have two sessions a day, of 2 1-2 hours each, commencing at 2 P. M., and 6 1-2 in the evening. SUBJECT, Resolved, "That immortality is a gift from God dependent upon the character of the receiver."

Rome and Napoleon; or, AN EXPOSITION OF THE 17TH CHAP. OF REV.

No. 4.

"Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets." —AMOS 3: 7.

Having considered the first six heads of the scarlet-colored beast, which carries, or supports the woman seated on "the seven hills," we pass to examine the seventh and last. We found the Austrian, or sixth head, extending from A. D. 1700 to 1804, at which time the Napoleon dynasty came into power and eclipsed all others in Europe. In harmony with her policy from her first union with a political husband, the church at Rome united at once with this powerful head. But this one was to continue but "a short space," before it went into "the bottomless pit," Abussou, the word here rendered "bottomless pit," means, when used literally, the "place of the dead." The same word occurs in Rom. 10: 7.—"Who shall descend into the deep (abussou), that is to bring up Christ again from the dead?" As the word in Rev. 17 occurs in symbolical prophecy, we should expect it to have a symbolical meaning. If so, then we should understand that when a dynasty goes into the abussou, or "place of the dead," it loses its power, or is buried politically. When it comes "out of the bottomless pit," it regains its authority again. When this beast comes out, "they that dwell on the earth shall wonder, whose names were not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world, when they behold the beast that was, and is not, and yet is." In the 11th verse we read, "The beast that was, and is not, even he is the eighth, and is of the seven," [or "one of the seven," as Wicklif's and the Geneva translations read] "and goeth into perdition." Which one of the seven heads is it that is "wounded to death," and goes into the "bottomless pit," or "place of the dead," and then comes out to cause "all the world" to "wonder?" We should naturally conclude that was the last head, or the seventh. "The eighth" is only one of the seven resurrected from "the bottomless pit," or political grave. It appears certain that neither of the first five "fallen" ones are to have a resurrection; hence it must be the sixth or seventh. The sixth does not now sustain the woman, but the seventh or Napoleon dynasty does. Let us see if this last mentioned head fills the prophetic history.

We will here introduce an exposition of this Scripture as given by Mr. G. S. Faber, a noted expositor of the prophecies, who died Jan. 27th, 1854, at the age of eighty-one years. He said:—

"We are distinctly taught that the polity, thus triply characterized by shortness of continuance, and death by the sword of military violence, and revival from the death thus inflicted, will go, together with the empire of which it is the seventh head, into UTTER DESTRUCTION." "Hence it is quite clear that, if the French Empireship be the short-lived and sword-slain and revived seventh head—of which, in the present day, there can scarcely, I think, be a reasonable doubt—then we must anticipate his sure and certain destruction along with that of the long-tolerated Roman Empire."

In 1816, forty-four years since, the year after Napoleon I. was carried to St. Helena, when speaking of the wounded head of the beast, then to be healed, Mr. Faber says:—

"The wound, however, which was thus healed, was the wound which was inflicted on the short-lived seventh head. Therefore, the wounded, short-lived seventh head has been shown to be the short-lived FRENCH EMPERORSHIP, which was wounded to death by the sword of England, Therefore the FRENCH EMPERORSHIP is that mortally wounded seventh head, whose deadly wound is destined to be healed....

Nor am I here presuming to play the prophet. So far from it, I simply state, either the very words of the prophecy, or the inspired description of what St. John saw in the picture-history. The seventh head then being the head which was mortally wounded by the sword, is the head which is destined to be healed." The rise of the eighth form, in the verbal interpretation of the angel, corresponds with the healing of the sword-slain head in the pictured hieroglyphic..... But the sword-slain head, thus destined to be healed, is the French Emperorship; and, according to the angel's interpretation, the literal mode in which it will be healed, is by the rise of an eighth form of a Roman government, which, however, is to be the same as one of the preceding seven. The FRENCH EMPERORSHIP, therefore, will be healed by the rise of that eighth form, with which one of the preceding seven will identify itself. Now it plainly cannot be thus healed, unless that particular form out of the preceding seven, which is to be the same as the yet future eighth, shall be the seventh form, or THE FRENCH EMPERORSHIP.... Hence the grand conclusion from the whole is immediately brought out: THE PREDICTED YET FUTURE EIGHTH FORM OF ROMAN GOVERNMENT WILL BE THE REVIVED FRENCH EMPERORSHIP."—Supplemental 3d vol. to a Dissertation on the Prophecies. Dissert. I, Sect. 4, pp. 78–92.

Were Mr. Faber living now, and familiar with the history of the healing of the seventh head, we think he would see no occasion to alter what he wrote in 1816, when it looked very improbable that a Bonaparte would again rule in France, and protect the woman on the "seven hills." Then every thing was against such a conclusion. Napoleon was banished for ever upon the lone isle of St. Helena. The great powers of Europe had formed the Holy Alliance, in which they agreed that no member of the Bonaparte family should ever sit again upon the throne of France. But "the Scripture cannot be broken." The head is healed, and there sits Napoleon, the "wonder" of "all the world." He now governs Rome, and but for his troops the Revolutionists would at once run the ploughshare of destruction through "the eternal city." But Napoleon will not always sustain the harlot. Yet as sure as he is her last head, or the seventh healed, so sure is her destruction at hand. When Napoleon withdraws his troops, her burning day may be immediately expected.

A London correspondent says, "Louis Napoleon, the great stay of the Pope, is going to 'let him slide.'" His "slide" will be "into perdition," and Napoleon must soon follow.

Said a Florence correspondent of Aug. 20th, 1859, "There is at this moment a most intimate alliance between the ecclesiastical power with its centre in the Eternal city, and the civil power with its head at Paris for eventual assistance." From this Italian correspondent, we learn that the present "HEAD" of the Roman woman is the French Emperor, of whom an English writer says:—

"Napoleon the Third is not merely the successor of Napoleon the First,—he is supplementary to the First.... His imitation of the First Napoleon is the most essential feature of his character. His mission seems to be the complete REVIVAL of a departed man, and of a departed empire. He is a RESURRECTIONIST—and a Resurrectionist not only in action, but in person.... From this day forth, he is no longer an individual, he is the embodiment of nations.... He has made himself, at once the patron of Jews and Gentiles; of Christians, Turks and Pagans. What can have inspired so vast a policy?....

It is strange that the present Emperor has begun his military career just at the age at which the First Emperor died. And so great is the resemblance in all other respects that one might almost imagine the First Napoleon had revived in the Third (having lost the fiery rashness of his youth,) and risen from the grave with the caution and experience of the time of life at which he died. The Third Napoleon is nothing more than the First Napoleon revived at the age of fifty-one."

"A man so strong in character, so deep in council, so fitted at a moment for every emergency of life, has never before appeared.... It seems as if this man were intended to lead on the human race to the last catastrophe, and to plunge it into the vortex of the last conflict between God and man.... Such enormous influence was never before concentrated in a single man.... Italy is but his stepping-stone to loftier empire; nor can we doubt that his present aim is to dethrone the Pope, and to make himself, like Charlemagne, EMPEROR of the ROMANS.—Whatever may be the issue, it is certain that Napoleon the Third, is the only NAME in the world, and, in point of influence, far greater than the first." "The French Empire sustains and supports the Roman 'woman' by means of its army, in garrison at Rome."

Said Napoleon the First after he was sent to St. Helena, "When I am in the grave, I shall be for the enslaved people the polar star of their rights. My name shall be the war-cry of their efforts, the signet of their hopes. I shall live again in the acts of others."

When Louis Napoleon entered Paris after his tour through France to prepare the way for the proclamation of the Empire, on one of the banners that greeted him was the following:—"The Uncle that was,—the Nephew that is." The prophecy reads,—"The beast that was, and is not, and yet is." Napoleon II. never reigned. He died at the age of twenty-one years.

Thus every feature of this prophecy, relating to the seventh head, its wound and subsequent healing, appears to be fulfilling in a most striking manner in the history of the Bonaparte dynasty. It is now "out of the bottomless pit," "and they that dwell on the earth" are expressing great "wonder" relative to the movements of this last "HEAD," or husband of the woman. Truly, Napoleon III. "is the embodiment of nations." The English writer has well said: "He is supplementary to the first,"—"he is a RESURRECTIONIST;" and as Dr. Cox says, "Oh, what a token of perdition to his dynasty." "The great and terrible day of the Lord" is rapidly approaching. Dear reader, are you ready?

What do Spiritualists Teach?

Said Mrs. Henderson, a noted Spiritualist, when speaking at the Melodeon in Boston:—"Jesus... had natural parents.... We cannot believe that there was any thing marvelous, either in his birth, his life, or in his death.... You claim that there may not be another Christ on earth; but we see no reason why there may not be myriads of them.... Christ never died."

Gibson Smith, a prominent Spiritualist, and one of the earliest believers, in giving a synopsis of his belief says:—

1. "I do not believe in the personality of God."

2. "I do not believe that the person who is called Jesus Christ was, or is, 'God's only Son.'... He... is no more the Son of God than was John Howard or George Washington."

3. "I do not believe that he who is called Jesus Christ is a Savior of the immortal souls of men."

4. "I do not believe that the Bible is the word of God. I believe it is the word of men in the body, and of men out of the body. I believe that ministers of all orders, who hold up to us the Bible as the word of God, and as being infallible authority in matters of faith and practice, are the dead weights of society, and serve as clogs under the wheels of the car of progress. They will surely be crushed to death under those wheels. Amen"

At the Spiritual Convention held for the purpose of inquiring into "the cause and cure of evil," Dr. R. T. Hallock said, as reported in the Spiritual Telegraph, when speaking of the sentiments of another:—"Now, we may cheerfully sympathize with his mirthful explosion of the popular Divinity; no merciful man will object even to his expunging from his vocabulary the three hateful little letters [G-o-d] which express it."

My Pilgrim Notes.

Monday evening, Oct. 29th, we arrived at Champlain, N. Y., and received a kind escort to the hospitable home of Bro. Alva Loomise, a true pilgrim to the land of glory. His house has long been a resting place for travelers to Mt. Zion. Here they ever find a hearty welcome at a well-spread board. He is an enterprising farmer, who loves the "blessed hope," and not ashamed to "stand up for Jesus" in any company where duty calls him to act. We spent our time very pleasantly in this happy family. Champlain is four miles from Rouses Point, and about one mile from Canada. This is an excellent farming district, producing largely of good wheat, potatoes, barley and oats. The land is rich and clayey, consequently quite muddy at this season. The Ogdensburg R. R. passes through the place.

Tuesday evening, we commenced our meetings. We found practical christianity rather low in this place—more politics than religion. Being so near the Presidential election, it was difficult to turn the attention of the people off from the vanities of this world, and away from its foolish strife to the great event now pending—the coming of Christ,—but we succeeded, by the blessing of the Lord, in getting a candid hearing from an intelligent audience, and several embraced the truth and went on their way rejoicing. Several lawyers and doctors manifested considerable interest in the meetings; and were pretty well convinced that we have the truth.

Here we met Bro. C. P. Dow, a faithful minister of the New Testament, who came in to assist in trying to persuade the people to be christians. This field was cultivated by Bro. Wm. Miller, and since by Brn. Himes, Litch, Osler, Pearson, the Burnhams, and other able men. We had a free time in speaking on the great truth that we get our life only through Christ, and put on immortality when he comes to raise the dead, and set up his kingdom. Several had been prejudiced against this important truth, who now see it clearly, and are rejoicing in the light. It was remarked that the people have not been so interested in studying the Scriptures for many years, notwithstanding the great political excitement, very bad traveling, rainy weather, and several other things well calculated to divert the minds of the people to such an extent, that it was said there had not been a time so unfavorable during the past four years. Thank the Lord, he has shown us that he is not confined alone to favorable seasons;—that it is not necessary for his children to wait till the devil gets his most important work accomplished before they begin. Many came to the wise conclusion that eternal life is of more value than the present short one; and that they have no time to lose in idle pursuits, if they would be ready for the coming of Christ, which is now emphatically "at the door."

Lord's day, Nov. 11th, we met at 9 1-2 in the morning and had a pleasant love-feast. Though the weather was stormy, and the roads very bad, a goodly number gathered to speak of blessings received and their bright prospects of eternal joys to come. In the evening we gathered around the table of the Lord, and enjoyed a heavenly season in commemorating a Savior's dying love. One at the table, who had been converted during the meetings, spoke of his determination to live a christian life, and separate himself from the world. He had sought literary honors in college life and medical studies, but has concluded to lay them all at Jesus' feet, and become his humble follower through evil as well as good report. An affectionate sister by his side, intelligent and amiable, who had been a fashionable professor in a popular church, came to the same noble conclusion, and like one really decided to be a christian, obeyed the Scriptures, laid aside bracelets, rings, and a valuable pin, adorning herself with "a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price." Then christianity became to her a reality, bringing a bright witness of acceptance, eclipsing the vanities of this fading world, and opening up to the eye of faith the radiant glories from the one to come, that made the scoffing frowns and biting jeers of the proud and gay, pass unheeded by, like the unmeaning talk of the idiotic or insane.

At the close of the communion five more arose and requested prayers that they might have a home in the coming kingdom among the pure and the holy. Thus closed a hard-fought battle with a pleasant victory. We felt that the enemy had been routed, and that truth had triumphed over error's hydra-headed form. We parted with bright hopes for the future.

Monday, Nov. 12th, we left Champlain for Sandy Hill. On our way, we called on Bro. Batchelor at Rutland, where we met Bro. Wendell going to Hinesburgh, Vt., to commence a series of meetings. We learned from Bro. W. that his wife had been very sick, but was recovering. We had a pleasant chat on things pertaining to the kingdom at hand, were cheered by the interview, and hurried away to our next battle scenes, anticipating a speedy close of the war that has been in earnest progress for about six thousand years. We often sing the lines of Dr. Watts:—

"Fly swifter round, ye wheels of time,
And bring the welcome day."

Affairs in Europe.

In Europe, as well as America, all things indicate that ere long things will arrive at a very complicated and terrible condition. It is evident that the preparations for "the battle of the great day" are rapidly approaching a consummation. The hearts of stout men must soon quail and quake at the sight of passing and coming events. The tide of revolution is rising daily, and the war clouds thicken on every side. The bloody onset cannot be far in the distance. The last great struggle is at hand, to be terminated by the coming of the Prince of Peace.

Throughout France the military preparations are very active, and it is said to be evident that Napoleon "intends shortly to astonish the world," and that Europe is "on the verge of a general convulsion." It is said Napoleon has made a contract for one hundred and fifty iron-cased gun-boats. Napoleon is now denominated "The Peace-maker of Europe!"

The following manifesto is said to be published by the advice and sanction of the Emperor, and has caused a deep sensation in the civilized world:—

"An organized and powerful Italy is henceforth for the interest of Europe. The Emperor will be the moderator of Italian revolution and the arbiter on questions of political equilibrium. The only wise course is a European Congress."

It is said that Bonaparte is "the undisputed arbiter of the political equilibrium of Europe."

Victor Emanuel says to the Neapolitans, "Next spring, with your co-operation, I shall have four hundred thousand men under arms, and, thank God, the Italians can fight." In France, the priesthood are deeply stirred against Napoleon for allowing Victor Emanuel to enter Italy; consequently the former will probably pretend to protect the Pope, while at the same time he will allow the Revolutionists to go on with their work. It is said that "upon the Emperor Napoleon now depends the fate of Italy." It is evident that Victor Emanuel is getting more power over the Italians than is pleasing to Napoleon. We think the latter intends to become king of Italy, like his uncle, Napoleon I. He is now passing through a difficult complication of affairs, but will, no doubt, manage to keep on the top of the wave which is continually rising higher.

Simplicity of the Bible.

We commend the following sensible and truthful remarks to the careful consideration of every lover of truth. They are worthy the notice of every believer in christianity. Read them.

"The fact that God gave a revelation, not for the learned, but for all classes of men; not for any one age or nation, but for all ages and all nations; proves, that that revelation may be understood, at least as to its direct teaching, without the aid of human science. It is an instructive fact, that the gospel was understood, and did achieve its most signal triumphs, at periods when every existing system of philosophy was fundamentally erroneous. The entire history of the Church in all ages, and in the present, sustains me in the assertion—that the gospel has lost its power over the human conscience and heart, precisely in the degree in which there has been departure from the obvious meaning of the language of the Bible, to accommodate its teaching to any science or system of philosophy. The history of the Church furnishes not a solitary exception to this general statement; indeed, one of the most convincing proofs of the inspiration of the Scriptures is the fact, that every attempt to improve upon their obvious meaning, (and there have been many such,) has been attended with loss of power, or has exhibited a perverted and pernicious power."

The foregoing thoughts should be treasured up as jewels to show to all our friends. Let the children, the young and old, the learned and unlearned,—all classes—have this sentiment instilled into their minds so thoroughly, that none of the delusions of Satan, or the sickly sentimentalism coming from popular pulpits, will ever eradicate it from their minds.

Our Tract Column.

For the Crisis.

Tract Fund for the West.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Encouraged still in our tract enterprise by occasional correspondence and free will offerings, we break our long silence, thinking perhaps it may stir up some pure mind by way of remembrance. Here is a letter from West Troy, N. Y:—

"Bro. Hastings:—I send you $2.00. I wish it were $10, but it is the widow's mite, and I have planted and taken care of my garden myself for the privilege of sending this to you for the tract cause."

This seems truly like "doing what thy hand findeth to do with thy might." Who will imitate it? The same unknown one, two weeks later, writes,—"I received the tracts you sent me, and I have $2.00 more, and if the Lord gives me any more money besides getting my coal for winter, you will hear from me again." So the seed increases. "He that ministereth seed to the sower," will both minister bread for your food, and multiply your seed sown, "and increase the fruits of your righteousness."

Here is a letter from the poverty swamps of Illinois—a call for help. A sister moves into a destitute region, a stranger, hunts up the neighbors who live at some distance, starts a prayer meeting, preaches the word as best she can,—people are interested, several are converted, they need tracts—too poor to buy,—here they are. Fly, ye silent messengers of love and mercy; tell with fervor the wondrous story of redeeming grace. Who'll send out some men? Here is a response from Weaver Dam, by D. R.:—

"Enclosed I send you $5.00 for the Tract Fund, as I notice in the 'Crisis' several loud calls for tracts to distribute." In this letter Bro. Ongley, of Pa., and Bro. Moses Chandler in the West, are remembered with much sympathy.

Here are several additional calls—one from a poor sick brother in N. B., about returning to England, perhaps to die amid his kindred; would carry with him tracts to spread truth among them. May his sickness prove "not unto death, but unto the glory of God." One from Columbia city, Ind. A German brother, who sometimes preaches in neighboring school-houses, wishes the aid of tracts for free distribution. H. C. H., Atlanta, Ill., writes,—

"A few weeks since my father sent me from Ohio one or two of your tracts—'Will all men be saved?' 'What is man?' 'The Soul,' and 'The Spirit,' (by M. Grant) also a copy of the 'World's Crisis,' in which I saw a list of valuable tracts not out of the reach of any. Three years ago I could lend to the Lord by aiding in funds to all such christian enterprises. But reverses have come upon me. I can scarcely support myself and family by honest industry. I have delayed writing, however, until the present, hoping to get funds to send, but finding I must either go without the great light upon the sacred Scriptures, or send my order without the funds, I now send. It is an old saying that 'if the heart be right, it matters but little about the head,' but I hope the time may speedily come when men's heads may become right also, that it may help them in going to God for his grace to assist in righting the heart. Hoping soon to be able to pay what I now borrow of the Lord, I am," etc.

How uncertain are earthly goods. Let us use them while they are ours to the glory of God. Another writer from Wisconsin:—"I have wanted some of your tracts very much. I have been waiting, hoping we could send you something, as I did not like to beg; but I fear I shall lose the chance of getting any if I wait any longer, as you wanted to fill all orders by Dec. 1st." These extracts assure us that the friends of Jesus in the West are not willingly beggars, but have hearts to give, and would scatter truth at their own expense, if poverty did not forbid. Shall there not be a constant Tract Fund operating in their behalf? Here come some letters which seem to answer the question. O. C——, of B——, sends $1.00. This is the second one within a month. Hear him:—

"A few weeks ago I sent you $1.00, and as I have another a burning hole in my pocket, you had better have it for the Tract Fund." If a dollar will burn one pocket out, what must the thousands of them do which are kept back from the Lord? Look out, ye "unjust stewards," there will be a hot time one of these days. Friends in L—— enclose $10.00 for the Western Fund. This seems like it. One calls, another responds liberally. "They that gathered little had no lack; they that gathered much had nothing over." So may

"We share our mutual woes,
Our mutual burdens bear."

C. W——, Vandalia, Ill., sends $3.00, and adds,—"God has seen fit to bless me in temporal affairs, so that I have got all I want in this world's goods, but hope I shall be able to make it more available, so that I may use it to his glory." That's the true idea. Be administrator of your own estate, then your will will be executed, and give no occasion for family broils after you are gone.

J. K. M., N. H., encloses $2.00 to send tracts to R. H. Clark, Cedar Valley, Wis. A letter from Abington, Ct., which does not let the right hand know what the left hand doeth, reads, "I enclose $3.00 for the Tract Fund. I should like to have one dollar's worth go to Bro. Spaulding, one to Bro. Moses Chandler, and the other as you please. I think those who cannot preach the word of life themselves, should send these silent little messengers. May God speak through them, is the prayer of an unworthy sister in Christ." Be of good cheer, ye toil-worn heralds of the cross; your cries for help enter the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth. God moves his people to your rescue. He will provide. See! here's another lift from Abington, larger than the first:—"$5.00 to help spread the gospel of the kingdom." A. P. H., of B., Me., who has already done much in circulating tracts, sends another dollar.

From Plantsville, Ct., are received $2.00 accompanied by the words,—"Small, but freely given." E. J. C. writes from Saratago Springs,—"Here are $5.00 from a woman that said she wished to give something to the Lord, and asked me to direct her how to apply it. Your Tract business being near my heart, it was first on my lips. So you are left at perfect liberty to apply it where you think it will answer the best purposes. J. W. E——, A——, O., writes:—"As I have $2.00 consecrated previously to that best of all uses, the glorious work of honoring God in the salvation of precious souls, I send them, praying that your little 'swift-winged messengers' may go forth freighted with the blessing of the God of Israel."

Well, I have nearly exhausted my pile of Tract Fund correspondence. We have a few more which tell us what books and tracts are doing. J. M. K., Hesper, writes,—"I am greatly indebted to you for sending me those 'Reasons of my Hope.' They are going from house to house in this distant land, and all declare (of all denominations) that it is a glorious truth book.' These little tracts are doing their work, and the truth is spreading in spite of the opposition, which is very strong."

T. W. S., Phila., says, "I wish to thank you for your kind presents. I have just finished reading your exceedingly interesting and profitable book, 'Reasons for my Hope.' I have read it with much pleasure, and have been much edified. I feel that my hope has been confirmed, and I feel better able to give a reason of the hope that is in me. I wish that the book was in the hands of every saint and sinner in the country. I am now reading 'The Great Controversy,' and am deeply interested in it. I have given those few tracts away, and they have done good already." The same brother writing at a later date, asking for tracts, says, "Different persons are asking me constantly whether I have any of Mr. Hastings' tracts? They want them, and I know they cannot buy them. Great good has resulted from what has been given. I do not like to make such a request. I would much rather buy than beg, but that is impossible."

Be not weary in well doing, ye friends of Jesus; Macedonia still needs help; laborers are few. Send over the tracts. The harvest time is near. 'Ye shall reap if ye faint not.'" H. L. H. per H. F. C.

Correspondence.

From Bro. T. W. Smith.

Bro. Grant:—I rejoice when I think of the escape I made from "Doubting Castle." It did not seem dark and cheerless when I was a willing prisoner, as it does now. What a powerful enchantment is thrown around the inmates of that dismal place. They wont believe they are prisoners, and so confident are they that the darkness with which they are surrounded is light, that when they are permitted to see the sunlight of truth, they turn away disgusted and call that sunlight, darkness. The sentiments taught by you and the rest of the Advent brethren are gaining ground in this city. On last Lord's day there were no less than four places where there was Advent preaching. Your publications are sought for eagerly. I lend the papers and books until they are worn out. The tracts prepare the way for conversation admirably. I wish I had more to distribute. I do not find as strong opposition to our views as I at first expected.

The truths taught by the Second Advent brethren are not understood by the people. Protestant "orthodox" ministers exhibit a spirit sometimes that savors strongly of that of Romish priests. You know that a great deal of their hold on the people, depends on the prejudice excited against their opponents by misrepresentations of our faith and practice. Church members have asked their "pastors" what they think of the Second Advent people. "Oh, they are a deluded class; they teach dangerous doctrines; they deny that there is any heaven, or hell, or resurrection," etc. Now how are we to counteract these impressions? They will hardly venture to hear an Advent preacher, or to listen to a debate. By the circulation of tracts and small publications, this end can be best obtained, I think. These little "preachers" are listened to when the living preacher will not be heard.

Philadelphia.

From Wm. A. Cramer.

Bro. Grant:—We are truly in the perils of the last days. Evil men and seducers are waxing worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived. We are in the days when men pre-eminently love themselves. Selfishness has become one of the prominent vices of the day. Men are looking eagerly for gain, envying one another and hating one another. And this is not confined to the people of the world. Alas! it has crept into the church of God. Truly, "the love of money is the root of all evil."

When I see the professed people of God striving about this world's goods, and going to law one with another, it leads me to cry out with the apostle Paul, "There is utterly a fault among you because ye go to law one with another. Why do ye not rather take wrong? Why do ye not rather suffer yourselves to be defrauded? Nay, ye do wrong and defraud, and that your brethren." Paul says, "Dare any of you having a matter against another go to law before the unjust and not before the saints? Do ye not know that the saints shall judge the world? And if the world shall be judged by you, are ye unworthy to judge the smallest matters? If, then, ye have judgments of things pertaining to this life, set them to judge who are least esteemed in the church. But brother goeth to law with brother, and that before the unbelievers. My brother, these things ought not so to be." Paul says, "Dearly beloved, avenge not yourselves, but rather give place unto wrath; for it is written, vengeance is mine, I will repay, saith the Lord." And again, we find it recorded in Matthew's gospel, "But I say unto you that ye resist not evil, but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also. And if any man will sue thee at the law, and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloak also." And again we read, "If ye bite and devour one another, take heed that ye be not consumed one of another."

Brethren, let us examine ourselves and see of what manner of spirit we are, whether we have the spirit of Christ or the spirit of the devil. The fruit of the spirit of Christ is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance. If we bear this fruit, shall we be found going to law? Shall we have laid ourselves liable to the laws of earth? Against such there is no law. Will the laws of God be against us? Will our case go against us in the great day of judgment? Against such there is no law. Let all bitterness and wrath, anger, clamor and evil speaking be put away from you, "with all malice; and be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you."

We read that "love worketh no ill to his neighbor; therefore love is the fulfilling of the law" "The night is far spent, the day is at hand: let us therefore cast off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armor of light." "For yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry.

Barnston, C. E.

From L. A. W——.

Bro. Grant:—The prophet Isaiah says, "Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God. Speak ye comfortably to Jerusalem, and cry unto her, that her warfare is accomplished, that her iniquity is pardoned."—Isa. 40: 1. And in obedience to the command, I want to say a few words to God's people, and especially to those under affliction, to whom the balm of comfort is ever sweet. Remember the company that John saw, so great that no man could number, that were saying, "Amen, blessing, and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honor, and power, and might be unto our God for ever and ever," were those that had come up out of great tribulation. All these had been through the furnace of affliction. All had been chastened, without which they would have been bastards and not sons. Shrink not, for no strange thing has happened to you, but consider those that have gone before, that have died in faith, had trials of cruel mockings and scourgings, bonds and imprisonments; were stoned, sawn asunder, tempted, slain with the sword,—wandered about in sheepskins and goatskins, being destitute, afflicted, tormented, of whom the world was not worthy; they wandered about in deserts and in mountains, and in dens and caves of the earth.—Heb. 11: 36—38. These were those that believed John's testimony when he said, "God is love," the nature of which is to do by the object beloved the very best that can be done under existing circumstances; although it might have seemed God had forsaken them, they knew he was true, and so counted not their own lives dear. They looked for rest far away in the future, after a life worn out by pain and sorrow, and nature had given up the conflict.

Christian, how does your hope compare with theirs?—living as we do without the possibility of a doubt at the very threshold of deliverance, expecting these vile bodies may be changed and fashioned like unto his glorious body, without feeling the cold grasp of the monster death, or passing through the dark charnel house, with the old prophet that lived more than twenty-five hundred years ago, speaking such words of consolation for us. They were not for him, not for the apostles, not for the martyrs, they could not have been for any other people than those living at the time the warfare should end.

If man was never to know the time for the consummation of his hope, how could he ever obey the prophet's command? But God is consistent and we will obey him; we will be comforted by the promised restitution and by the time when that which was lost is to be restored. We claim the right because our Master told us to lift up our heads, knowing redemption is nigh. But while the saint may rejoice, how is it with the sinner, you that have heard the sound go forth—"Behold the bridegroom cometh?" The evidences have been spread out before you in so plain and simple a manner that your judgment must have been convinced, but you have resisted the influence, turned the subject out of your mind, because you had not received a love for the truth. Would you love to see Jesus and be made like him? Have you not some idol this side of him that will not let your affections reach so far? One thing is sure, our hope must reach within the vail, whither our forerunner has entered, and which will desire to bring him back again. This hope can be obtained in no other way, but by giving up the world, and being willing this man Christ Jesus should reign over us.

What possible advantage can there be in resisting the coming of Jesus, when the strife of all the great, the noble, the rich, the honored of earth could not cause him to delay one moment? What is feeble man that he should resist God? It is the "fear of God" that is the "beginning of wisdom; and to depart from evil is understanding." What if your proud, stubborn heart can for awhile stand out against the strivings of the Spirit? There will be a time when you will have to bow. You may put it off until the last servant of God is sealed in the forehead, and the angel shall say, "It is done!" but when the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, call for the rocks and mountains to fall on them, to hide them from the face of Him that sitteth on the throne and from the wrath of the Lamb, there will be anguish and repentance, but too late!

Hawley, Mass.

From Sr. H——.

Brethren and Sisters in Christ:—We are located in the western land, where there is a little band of believers in Christ, striving to enter in through the strait gate that leads to everlasting life, strong in the faith that we very soon shall see that glorious King in his beauty. The times denote his coming to gather in the harvest, to save his chosen ones. Are we ready to meet him? Are our robes washed in the blood of the Lamb? Are we doing all in our power to promote the cause of Christ; or are we, like Ananias and Sapphira, keeping back part of the price? There is something for all to do. Of all that profess the name of Christ, I feel I am the least. My prayer is, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? I feel like Jeremiah of old, "Oh! that my head were waters and mine eyes a fountain of tears; that I might weep day and night for the slain of the daughters of my people."

Wisconsin.

From S. J. Craft.

Bro. Grant:—Although a stranger personally, I address you as a sister, hoping that the Lord may bless you in your labor of love. I am well pleased with the "Crisis." I peruse its contents with joy. I am deprived of the privilege of meeting with those who preach the truth. I attend the nearest conference every year, at Old Union, and at Fairfield, Harvard Co., which is a hundred and forty-nine miles. My husband believes the doctrine, but has not made up his mind to be a christian. I am alone, forsaken by father and friends, but I love the cause of Christ, and the hope of seeing him soon aids me to

Obituary Notices.

Died, in Strawberry Point, Oct. 19th, 1860, aged twenty-one months and six days, Mary Ella, the only child of Peter S. W. and Lovina Deyo.

Also, Oct. 20th, 1860, William J., infant child of Lewis and Sarah A. Bishop, aged one month.

The funeral of these little cousins was attended at the same time by Eld. A. Hubbell, at the Baptist church, from Heb. 9: 23. He tried to comfort us, that although we were under the Adamic curse, there is a time for full salvation to those who seek for eternal life, who shall inherit the earth.

We feel an enemy hath done this, and we could not endure the trial were it not for the soon coming of the Lord and the resurrection.

Peter S. W. Deyo.

Herald and Expositor, please copy.

Died, in Southboro, Oct. 26th, Bro. John Flint, of consumption, aged twenty-nine.

Bro. F. was sick some fourteen months. During this time he suffered much, yet without complaining. In this long sickness he experienced much of the practical workings of mortality. He had however to support him, the lively hope of life and immortality through Christ his Savior. He was formerly a member of the Baptist church in that place, and was dismissed from them on account of his faith on some of the great truths of the gospel not agreeing with their faith He was, however, considered by the church and the world to be a very devoted believer in the Savior. He died respected by all who knew him.

His request was that Bro. Fassett should attend his funeral. But Bro. F. being away from home at the time, I was requested to fill his place. Providence seemed to favor this arrangement; and the funeral was attended on Tuesday following by a large congregation, who listened patiently to a long discourse from Job. 14: 14. "If a man die, shall he live again?" May the consolations of the blessed hope give support to the afflicted companion and friends.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

[Advices of the 7th.]

The Piedmontese troops under Victor Emmanuel gained a brilliant victory on the 3d inst. on the Garigliani. They attacked the Bourbon army in front with their troops flanked by the fleet, and dispersed them, the tents, wagons and stores of the enemy falling into Victor Emmanuel's possession, with 11,000 prisoners. General Sonnaz pursued the enemy afterwards and occupied Mola and other positions commanding Gaeta.

Victor Emmanuel was expected at Naples.

Anarchy reigned at Viterbo.

The voting on the question of annexation had commenced at Perequia. The inhabitance at Viterbo hastened to vote, notwithstanding the French occupation and the Pontificial gendarmes.

The report that a treaty of commerce had been concluded between England and Austria is unfounded.

A large body of troops who remained outside of the fortress of Gaeta, had sent a proposal of surrender to the Piedmontese.

Later telegrams from Shanghae say that the reported negotiations were not going on smoothly at Tien Sin.

The telegraph cable to connect Singapore with Rangoon was about to be sent from England. It is 1300 miles in length.

Fresh troops have left Turin for Naples.

FRANCE.

The Scotsman says:—"There exist, we have reason to believe, some grounds for suspecting that the French Emperor is wavering in his Italian policy, and has given orders to Gen. Goyon to interpose, probably only in the last extremity, in favor of the King or ex-King of Naples. One motive to which this alleged change of feeling is ascribed, is the sort of re-action in French popular opinion, arising from the overthrow of Lamoricierce, which is regarded apparently as a sort of national misfortune."

Victor Emmanuel's Battle.

The following is the official dispatch relating to this event, forwarded from Turin:

"Nov. 4th. Yesterday our troops, commanded by King Victor Emmanuel, attacked and dispersed the Bourbon army beyond the Garigliano. Tents, wagons, and an immense number of prisoners were left in our possession. General Sonnaz has occupied Mola di Gaeta and other positions above the City."

"Naples, Nov. 3. A part of the division of Gen. Sonnaz has crossed the Garighano.

The whole army will cross to-morrow.

Bridges are being thrown across the river."

Another telegram says:

"A part of the division of General Sonnaz has crossed the Garigliano and taken the iron bridge, at the same time taking 100 prisoners.

The Royalists have fallen back upon Gaeta. Throughout their march they were much embarrassed by the fire of the Sardinian fleet."

ROME.

Nov. 3d. Large quantities of stores and war material have arrived here for the use of the French army.

The enrolment of foreigners for the Papal army has been stopped.

Perfect order and enthusiasm prevail every where.

A New Suggestion about the Pope.—The idea of installing the Pope in Jerusalem has been broached by the French press. They say it is no further from Jerusalem to Jaffa than from Rome to the seaport, Civita Vecchia; a railroad would place Jerusalem within one hour of the Mediterranean, and it would be nearly as convenient for the Catholic world as Rome is now. It would add also very much to the advance of christianity in the East. The French army in Syria can easily take possession of Palestine if the Sultan should dare refuse a demand for it; in fact, they say it would be the easiest way to settle the Roman question.

The Bible Society.—To the praise of that noble institution—the British and Foreign Bible Society—the word of God is now freely circulating in almost all of Italy. The agents of this Society have followed close on the victorious armies with their Bibles and Testaments, in the Italian and the French languages. They may now be found in the book stores and in the stalls of the hawkers. The people receive them with avidity. I gave an Italian Bible to my courier—a Catholic—who received it with many thanks, saying that he had never read the Bible, and was ignorant of its teachings. Every Bible is a power in this land.—Cor. Independent.

☞ The Springfield Republican says, that it is a fact that will surprise those who are not familiar with the church history of New England, that the early church covenants contained no statements of doctrine. Such was the fact in respect to the first church in Salem and the first and second churches in Boston, and Dr. Palfrey says in his history, "I do not remember a material deviation from this catholic character in any of a considerable number of early covenants which have come under my eye."

Editorial Notice.

An Error.—Near the middle of the third column of the second page of the Crisis of Nov. 14th, for the expression,—"It is well known that when beast is used mechanically," read, "It is well known that when beast is used symbolically in the Scriptures, it represents a dynasty, or body of civil rulers."

Notice.

Northern Illinois and Southern Wisconsin Quarterly Conference will be held at Harvard, McHenry Co., Ill., to commence Friday, Dec. 28th, 2 o'clock, where Bro. Reed may appoint. In behalf of the church,

Robert Crown, Evangelist.

The Lord permitting, I will preach at London Bridge the first Sabbath in Dec., if it does not conflict with any other appointment. T. M. Preble.

Notice.

I wish to say through the Crisis that I am ready to spend my whole time in the field as an Evangelist, and shall try to furnish tracts and works to give to the needy, and sell to those that will buy. I here offer myself to all Christian Associations, to act as agent for them in behalf of our absent Lord, and will endeavor to attend to all calls within my limited ability, at the same time believing the body well knows that the laborer is worthy of his hire, and will be happy to comply with all that should wish my labor, by their addressing me at Plum River, Jo Davis Co., Ill. Robt. Crown, Evangelist.

Notice.

All who wish to preach in the Chapel of the Second Advent Association of Scitico, Conn., are expected to confer with the Clerk of said Association. Per order,

C. W. Baker, Clerk.

ESPECIAL BOOK NOTICE.

English Bibles.

We have just received a well assorted selection of genuine English Bibles, the prices of which we affix below. Having paid cash for them, we get them at the lowest prices, and therefore can afford to sell them for cash at the lowest retail rates. There is a heavy duty levied upon all printed matter coming from the English side of the line; but, all things taken into account, we offer them lower than sold elsewhere, as follows:—

Pearl, (reference betwixt the verses) roan binding, $1.25; postage 14 cts.
Pearl, do. do. colored calf, $1.50; postage 15 cts.
Pea l, do. do. morocco, $1.61; postage 15 cts.
Nonpareil, do. do. roan, $1.50; postage 21 cts.
Do. do. do. morocco, $2.25; postage 21 cts.
Minion, do. do. roan, $1.75; postage 26 cts.
Do. do. do. morocco, $2.50; postage 26 cts.

Please send in your orders, which shall be promptly attended to.

A Proposition.

To any one who will send us a new subscriber for one year, we will forward, post paid, a copy of our late discussion with Eld. W. W. Clayton, on the conscious state of the spirit after death, and the destruction of the wicked. And for a new subscriber for six months, we will send a copy of the pamphlets on "Soul" and "Spirit." With a little effort, a thousand names may be added to our list. Let every reader try to aid in scattering the light and truth. Now is the time to work.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brn. that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday Morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

For the Crisis.

The Land Elysian.

SELECTED BY S. D. B.

"Thine eyes shall see the King in his beauty; they shall behold the Land of far distances."*—Isa. 33: 17.

Beyond these chilling winds and cloudy skies,
Beyond death's gloomy portal—
There'll be a land where beauty never dies.
Where saints shall live, immortal.
[Acts 3: 21; 1 Cor. 15: 20; Rev. 21: 4; Isa. 60: 18, 17–22.]

A land where light shall ne'er be dimmed by shade,
With fields forever vernal—
Where nothing beautiful can ever fade,
But bloom for aye—eternal.
[Isa. 60: 19, 20; Rev. 22: 5; Isa. 35: 1, 6; Ib. 41: 19; Ib. 43: 19, 20; Ib. 51: 3.]

There saints will breathe the clear, the balmy air
Mid ever blooming flowers;
They'll sing for aye,—and songs shall echo there,
Through those enchanted bowers.
[Isa. 65: 17; Ib. 66: 22; 2 Pet. 3: 13; Rev. 21: 1, 5; Isa. 26: 1; Rev. 5: 9; Ib. 14: 3; Ib. 15: 3; Isa. 35: 6, 10; Ib. 51: 11; Ib. 55: 12, 13.]

The golden city's King the saints will see,
With clear, immortal vision:
For with salvation clothed, in ecstasy
They'll pass the gates elysian.
[Rev. 21: 2, 10, 11, 18, 21; Ib. 22: 4; Isa. 32: 1; Ib. 33: 17; Ib. 24, 23; Ps. 132: 16; Ps. 149: 4; Ps. 61: 10; Rev. 22: 14, 15.]

O, land of glory! land of love divine!
With fields forever vernal!
O, shall these way-worn, pilgrim feet of mine,
Walk there with God—eternal?
[Ps. 72: 19; Isa. 6: 3; Ezek. 43: 2; Num. 14: 10, 21; Isa. 35: 2; Ib. 40: 5, 31; Hab. 3: 2–16; Col. 3: 4; 1 Pet. 3: 3–5, 13; 1 John 3: 2; 1 Thess. 4: 17; Ps. 1: 1–6; Isa. 33: 15, 16.]

Portsmouth, N. H.

* Heb. "Shall behold the land of far distances;" literally, not now seen, but to be seen far in the future. Expressive of futurity, not of distance in miles, as "beyond the bounds of space," etc.

For the Crisis.

"Apostasy."—Dialogue 5.

Brown. So, Bro. Smith, I understand you have changed your religion, and joined the Second Advent folks. I must say I am very sorry for it; I had hoped you had more stability of character.

Smith. No, Bro. Brown, I have not "changed my religion," but I hope religion has changed me. I have for some years professed to be a christian, and I have yet to learn that I have apostatized from the faith of Christ, by looking and praying for his promised return to sit on the throne of his father David according to the flesh.

B. I know you were a member of the Baptist church, and you exerted a good influence there; but latterly you have lost all that influence, the black mark of "apostasy" is branded on you; and you know that, in the eyes of the world, nothing is so disgraceful as to change your mind on the subject of religion.

S. Bro. Brown, will you permit me to ask you one question; did you ever repent?

B. Repent! Why yes, of course, how could I be a christian without repentance and faith? But what has this to do with our subject?

S. Then it seems you have changed your mind as well as I, for this is the meaning of the word repentance. It is not, as some fancy, a mere sorrow for sin, or for its consequences; but a thorough, radical change of mind; a turning away from sin and error, and a cordial love and devotion for the truth. If this is "apostasy," I pray God we may have more of it!

B. But I hate and despise a man who is for ever changing his mind, and running after every new-fangled notion, that is calculated to lead the weak-minded astray from the good old paths in which our fathers trod. "Unstable as water, they shall not excel."

S. If you go to quoting scripture, I can meet you there. "Prove all things, and hold fast that which is good." Both these passages, taken together, will keep the scales even, so that neither will kick the beam. A thing is neither true nor false because my father or grandfather believed it: error is nearly as old as truth; and, in this fallen state, has ever been in the ascendant. On the subject of religion, popular opinions are always to be distrusted, and it frequently happens that what is highly esteemed amongst men, is had in abomination before God; and, I doubt not, your "fossilized" religion is liable to this "bad eminence." For my part, though I cannot say "I hate or despise any man," or his honest opinions; yet I can say that I respect and love that man above all others, who is not afraid or ashamed to change his mind, confess his error, and, in the face of all opposition, to cleave to the truth with full purpose of heart. I wish there was more such "apostasy" as this; it would make devils tremble and angels rejoice.

B. Well, Bro. Smith, it seems you and I are not on the same track; time is hastening us both on to the end of our journey; I trust we shall both get safe home at last; and, if so, it matters not how we get there.

S. If two opposite roads lead to the same place, your wish may be gratified. I dare not trust to any such contingency. Eternal life is to me of unspeakable value. I am told in God's word, that the broad and beaten track, where so many travel, leads to destruction; and I want to find the narrow path that leads to life, however few there may be found in it. Men may call me an "apostate," if they list, and cast out my name as evil. Human opinion, in my estimation, is of little value, when brought in competition with the word and will of God. This is the anchor of my hope; it has out-ridden many a storm, and has never failed those who have fixed their hope there; and it never will, is the echo of faith, heard amidst the storms and tempests of this mortal life. "An anchor of the soul, sure and steadfast, entering into that within the vail." J. Parry.

For the Crisis.

Bro. Grant:—A few days ago, as I was seated beside my most affectionate aunt, Mrs. E. S. Willard, rehearsing to her my many perplexities and crosses, in walking the upward path of life, I asked for advice, for I knew that she had obtained the top of the hill and now had begun its descent. She arose hastily saying, "I have an article that will just meet your case." It was headed, "Bearing the Cross," which she read to me.

It seemed to be just what I needed—to know how to bear my cross—not only in one particular, but in every thing. It seemed so precious, and the attainment to the mark at which it aimed, so desirable and important, that I am induced to send it to you, believing it will furnish a savory portion of "meat in due season" to the tempted and tried children of God in these perilous times. Will not the lovers of Christ read the article? S. B. Roter.

Bearing the Cross.

Much is said among professed christians about "bearing the cross"; but we fear little is understood or really practiced in this matter. Some seem to think speaking in meeting is the cross they must bear; and when they have done that, they think little more about the cross. We apprehend that is a very small item in bearing the cross. Men are all naturally in love with this present world.

To this world we must become crucified. Crucifixion is a hard death; but few persons are willing to die such a death; there is, however, no other way of entering into the kingdom of God. We must be "crucified unto the world, and the world unto" us. Most professed christians, it is to be feared, have made a covenant with the world, not to part with it; and the tempter satisfies them, if they speak in meeting sometimes, and give something to support the gospel, they may keep their covenant with the world; but "if any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him."—1 John 2: 15. How then are we to be separated from the love of the world, and be crucified unto it?

First, by a believing view of the Lord Jesus Christ, who became poor—was despised of men—a man of sorrows, acquainted with grief—endured reproach—resisted temptation, though he "suffered, being tempted"—when he was reviled, reviled not again—murmured not, though wounded, bruised—put to grief, and his soul made an offering for sin, scourged, spit upon, his hands and feet pierced with nails—his soul in agony—all this he bore, and no lisp of impatience ever escaped him. Would you be crucified unto the world, go learn of him: contemplate his poverty—his life—his sufferings—his resignation, his patience—his loving and forbearing spirit, till the whole mind is humbled within you: and then realize this truth, "If so be we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together."—Rom. 8: 17. Do you ask what it is to suffer with him? We answer, to suffer with the same meek, patient, forgiving, resigned spirit that he had.

This leads us to say, secondly, if you would bear your cross and be crucified unto the world—remember, every trial of your life—whether temporal or spiritual, personal or family, from friends or enemies, direct or indirect, great or small, of short continuance or long, or whatever be the nature or character of it, is by the appointment or permission of that God who willeth not the death of the sinner, but who is seeking by all these trials to crucify you unto the world, and fit you to be glorified with his Son Jesus Christ. How shall this design of our heavenly Father be accomplished? It cannot be, unless you "bear your cross."

Do you ask again, what is it to bear my cross? It is to suffer all the trials of which we have spoken, patiently. You are not to quarrel with the instrumentality God may employ, nor indulge in fretfulness under it. If you do, you do not "bear your cross." And though you should speak like an angel in meeting, yet if you fret and complain under any of the trials of life, by which God is seeking to crucify you unto the world, it is hypocrisy for you to talk about your "bearing the cross." You are but deceiving your own souls. God has assured us "all things work together for good to them that love him." Yet you can murmur, fret and complain, at those things which God has permitted or appointed! Alas! do not dream you are ripening for the kingdom of God while this is the case. No, you are ripening for death—for perdition. Saith our Savior,—"In your patience possess ye your souls." We shall learn soon, or when it is too late, that these words are words of solemn, awful import. If you indulge in murmuring, complaining, or impatience at any trials, insults, sufferings or injuries, from whatever instrumentality they may come, and that spirit is increasing upon you, you are just as surely traveling in the road to perdition as God has said, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die."

We speak not now of one "overtaken in a fault," to which all are liable in the hour of temptation—but we speak of him upon whom this spirit is not abating but increasing—and it is increasing except we bear our cross daily: for every day will bring some cross, in some form. Happy the soul who is continually looking to God for grace to bear every cross! We may pray to have the cross removed; but we may not pray for it only in submission to the will of God. "If it be possible, let this cup pass from me; nevertheless, not my will but thine, be done." That is our example; and we cannot safely follow any other. "My grace is sufficient for thee," will often be the answer; and did we know now what we shall know hereafter, we should praise God even now, that he does not leave us to our own way, lest we should be like the children of Israel, whose impatient murmurings were answered by giving them "flesh," but "leanness" was "sent into their souls." "Be patient in all things": that is—bearing thy cross; then, when Christ appears, you shall have a crown.

I would add, that the very writing of this article has inspired new resolutions within my soul to continually be on my watch-tower, lest Satan's allurements will lead me out of the path of duty. I would say, that I was one of the three which followed the example of our crucified Redeemer last spring, in Warsaw, Ind., and was buried in a watery grave. Never shall I forget the scene beside the calm lake; what peace of mind did I feel, when I knew I had discharged my duty. And now, my dear brother, I feel it is necessary for us as christians, to have on the whole armor of God, that we may be enabled to turn aside the mighty foes which do assail us in our pathway. In conclusion may I say, my prayer is that God's liberal hand may be extended toward us and gently lead us along the rugged descent of life, and finally permit us to come forth on the resurrection morn clad in the habiliments of eternal life.

"Twenty Thousand Baptists!"

The following will be read with interest by the lovers of truth. It shows how far modern theologians have departed from their fathers and the Bible. A large proportion of the theology of the present day is composed of speculative opinions of men, unsupported by the scriptures of truth. As Mr. Charles Beecher says, "The time has come when men having itching ears, and forms of godliness without the power, are heaping to themselves teachers; when they will not endure sound doctrine, but are turned aside unto fables."

After the following confession of faith was signed by John Bunyan and forty other elders, deacons, and brethren, and approved by more than twenty thousand others, it was presented to King Charles II., in London, 1660. They said, "We are not only resolved to suffer persecution to the loss of our goods, but also life itself, rather than decline from the same."—Ed. Crisis.

Art. 22. "We believe that the same Lord Jesus who showed himself alive after his passion, by many infallible proofs, (Acts 1: 3,) which was taken up into heaven, (Luke 24: 51,) shall so come in like manner as he was seen to go into heaven, (Acts 1: 9—11:—'And when Christ, who is our life, shall appear, we also shall appear with him in glory.'—Col. 3: 4. 'For the kingdom is his, and he is the governor among the nations,' (Psa. 22: 28,) and 'king over all the earth,' (Zech. 14: 9,) 'and we shall reign with him on the earth.'—Rev. 5: 10. The kingdoms of this world (which men so mightily strive after to enjoy) shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ.—Rev. 11: 15. 'For all is yours,' (ye that overcome this world,) 'for ye are Christ's and Christ is God's.'—1 Cor. 3: 22, 23. 'For unto the saints shall be given the kingdom, and the greatness of the kingdom, under the whole heaven.'—Dan. 7: 27. Though, alas! now many men be scarce content that the saints should have so much as a being among them, but when Christ shall appear, then shall be their day, then shall be given unto them power over the nations, to rule them with a rod of iron.—Rev. 2: 26, 27. Then shall they receive a crown of life, which no man shall take from them, nor they by any means turned or overturned from; for the oppressor shall be broken in pieces, (Psa. 72: 4,) and their vain rejoicing be turned into mourning and lamentations, as it is written.—Job 20: 5—7."

We believe that there will be an order in the resurrection; Christ is the first fruits, and then next, or after, they that are Christ's at his coming; then, or afterward, cometh the end. Concerning the kingdom and reign of our Lord Jesus Christ, as we do believe that he is now in heaven at his Father's right hand, so we do believe, that at the time appointed of the Father, he shall come again in power and great glory; and that at, or after his coming the second time, he will not only raise the dead, and judge and restore the world, but will also take to himself his kingdom, and will, according to the Scriptures, reign on the throne of his father David, on Mount Zion, in Jerusalem, forever."

"We believe that the kingdom of our Lord will be an universal kingdom, and that in this kingdom the Lord Jesus Christ himself will be alone, visible, supreme Lord and King of the whole earth.

"We believe that as this kingdom will be universal, so it will be also an everlasting kingdom that shall have no end, nor cannot be shaken; in which kingdom the saints and faithful in Christ Jesus shall receive the end of their faith, even the salvation of their souls; where the Lord is they shall be also.

"We believe that the New Jerusalem that shall come down from God out of heaven, when the tabernacle of God shall be with them, and he will dwell among them, will be the metropolitan city of this kingdom, and will be the glorious place of residence of both Christ and his saints forever, and will be so situated as that the kingly palace will be on Mount Zion, the holy hill of David, where his throne was."—Crosby's Hist. of Bapt., vol. ii., App. 85.

"Since you would know by what name I would be distinguished from others, I tell you I would be, and hope I am a Christian; and I choose, if God should count me worthy, to be called a Christian, a believer, or any other such name which is approved by the Holy Ghost. And as for those factious titles of Anabaptists, Independents, Presbyterians, or the like, I conclude that they came neither from Jerusalem nor Antioch; but rather from Hell and Babylon, for they naturally tend to divisions. You may know them by their fruits. John Bunyan."

The Adieu.

To Thee, when called awhile to part
With friends or kindred dear,
To Thee we raise each drooping heart,
And tell each rising fear;
For thou, oh God, art ever nigh
To hear thy children when they cry.

The Lord in mercy condescends
To those who ask his love;
Calls them his children and his friends,
And writes their names above.
His bending ear, his smiling face,
Are present at the throne of grace.

As children of a father's care,
Thy blessings we implore;
As friends of Jesus, we would share
Thy presence evermore.
'Tis this alone can cheer the soul,
And every rising grief control.

If thou art with us when we part
With friends or kindred dear,
To fill with joy each drooping heart,
And banish every fear;
How easy then to bid adieu!
For Jesus smiles and Heaven is true.

Please Examine.

It is my opinion that greater errors have grown out of a misapprehension of 1 Cor. 15: 24–28, than almost any other passage in the Bible, and this arises from a want of an understanding of the specific work of God the Father and his Son Jesus. Many suppose that Christ is to reign till he puts all enemies under his own feet. But it is the specific work of the Father to put all enemies under his Son's feet. This will appear evident, when we consider that Christ is to be seated on his Father's throne, "till his enemies be made his footstool." To prove this we will quote a few passages:—"The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit thou at my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool."—Psa. 110: 1. "The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand, till I make thine enemies thy footstool."—Matt. 22: 44. "The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand, until I make thy foes thy footstool."—Acts 2: 34, 35.

"But to which of the angels said he at any time, Sit on my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool?"—Heb. 1: 13. "But this man, after he had offered one sacrifice for sins forever, sat down on the right hand of God; from henceforth expecting till his enemies be made his footstool." Heb. 10: 12–13.

Thus we have four witnesses, David, Jesus, Peter and Paul; all testifying that Jesus, the Son of God, must sit at his Father's right hand, till God the Father puts all enemies under his Son's feet, agreeable to 1 Cor. 15: 25, now under consideration. Hope none will try to evade this, for fear it will clash with their views. "Let God be true!"

This view will greatly aid us to understand what is meant by delivering up the kingdom to God. It is not the mediatorial kingdom as many erroneously believe; for there is no such kingdom mentioned in the Bible; but it is "the kingdom under the whole heaven," or this habitable globe—(Greek—kosmos,) where the angels—or reapers—will gather out of it "all things that offend, and them which do iniquity," Matt. 13: 41;) for this earth is to be made glorious, so that God's will is to be done in it as it is done in heaven! (Matt. 6: 10.) Then will be fulfilled what the Lord spake by the mouth of Isaiah the Prophet;—"I will make the place of my feet glorious," Isa. 60: 13; and this,—the place of his feet—is the earth, for He says;—"The heaven is my throne, and the earth is my footstool." Isa. 66: 1. But God the Father will not put all enemies under his Son's feet, so long as the Son is on his Father's throne pleading, or interceding, for sinners; but as soon as his mediation ceases, he will then leave his Father's throne, and deliver up this habitable globe to the Father, for him to cleanse and purify, and thus make the earth,—the place of his feet,—glorious.

With this view of the subject, let us paraphrase this passage as follows:—"Then cometh the end (of this world) (Greek, aion, age or dispensation,) when he (the Son) shall have delivered up the kingdom, (this habitable globe) to God, even the Father; when he (the Father) shall have put down all rule and all authority and power.—For he (the Father) must reign till he hath put all enemies under his (Son's) feet. The last enemy (to God's people) that shall be destroyed is death. For he (the Father) hath (by decree or promise) put all things under his (Son's) feet. But when he saith, all things are put under him (his Son), it is manifest (or perfectly plain) that he (the Father) is excepted which did put all things under him (his Son.) And when all things shall be subdued (except the Father) unto him, then (still, as in time past,) shall the Son also himself be subject unto him (the Father) that put all things under him (his Son), that God may be all in all," (the same as he ever had been before.) Amen. T. M. Preble.

The Accuracy of the Bible.

An astonishing feature of the word of God is, notwithstanding the time at which its compositions were written, and the multitude of the topics to which it alludes, there is not one physical error—not one assertion or allusion disproved by the progress of modern science. None of those mistakes which the science of each succeeding age discovered in the books of the preceding: above all, none of those absurdities which modern astronomy indicates in such great numbers in the writings of the ancients; in their sacred codes; in their philosophy, and the finest pages of the fathers of the church; none of these errors are to be found in any of our books. Nothing there will ever contradict that which, after so many ages, the investigations of the learned world have been able to reveal to us on the state of our globe, or that of the heavens.

Peruse with care our Scriptures from one end to the other, to find there such spots, and, whilst you apply yourselves to this examination, remember that it is a book which speaks of every thing, which describes nature, which recites its creation, which tells us of the writer, of the atmosphere, of the mountains, of the valleys, of the animals, and of the plants. It is a book which teaches us of the first revolutions of the world, and which foretells its last. It recounts them in the circumstantial languages of history, it extols them in the sublimest strains of poetry, and it chants the charms of glowing songs. It is a book which is full of oriental rapture, elevation, variety, and boldness. It is a book which speaks of the heavenly and invisible world, whilst it also speaks of the earth and things visible. It is a book which nearly fifty writers of every degree of cultivation, of every state, of every condition, and living through the course of fifteen hundred years, have concurred to make.

It is a book which was written in the centre of Asia, and in the sands of Arabia, and in the deserts of Judea; in the court of the temple of the Jews, in the music schools of the prophets of Bethel and Jericho, in the sumptuous palaces of Babylon, and on the idolatrous banks of Chebar, and finally, in the centre of western civilization, in the midst of polytheism and its idols, and in the bosom of pantheism and its sad philosophy. It is a book whose first writer had been for years a pupil of the magicians of Egypt; in whose opinion the sun, the stars, and the elements, were endowed with intelligence, reached on the elements, and governed the world by a perfect alluvium. It is a book whose first writer preceded, by more than nine hundred years, the most ancient philosophers of ancient Greece and Asia; the Thaleses, and the Pythagorases, Zaluceses, the Xenophons and the Confuciuses. It is a book which carries its narrations to the hierarchies of angels; even to the most distant epochs of the future, and the glorious scenes of the last day.

Well, search among its fifty authors, search among its sixty-six books, its 1,189 chapters, and 31,713 verses, search for one of the thousand errors which the ancients and moderns committed when they speak of the heavens, of the earth, of their revolutions, or their elements—search, but you will find none.

The Heart's Door.

The heart is by nature a closed chamber. We may stand by its windows and look in, but its secrets we cannot explore. No where are we greater strangers than here. We may consider ourselves but at home in it, but after all it baffles our inquiries and treats us as sojourners. We may compliment ourselves about its excellence—but these theories are all shadows. Unless God is pleased to wake us to the truth, we live and die deceiving and deceived. But let him touch our eyes and then the shadows fall. Door after door is opened; vault after vault uncovered. The bolts of prejudice, of selfishness, of avarice are loosened. Sometimes this is done softly and gradually. Not with a crash, but quietly are the portals unclosed. But gradual as may be the discovery, it is enough to cover us with shame. Foul broods of lust are disclosed. Sinful and passionate impulses are brought to light. What we once looked upon as a garden of beauty, now appears a desert, void and polluted. Instead of a sanctuary, we find but a den of thieves. Not love, but hatred toward God; not mercy, but jealousy toward our fellow men; not generosity, but sordid selfishness. Nothing we find that could please God; nothing that does not deserve his eternal reprobation.

Yet this insight into our heart's real condition is one which we would often fain regret. The dream of self-love is far sweeter than is this bitter and humiliating truth. But that dream is the charm by which Satan drags us to ruin; this truth is the leading-string by which the hand of grace draws us to life. For this purpose the Holy Ghost keeps guard at the door of the heart. He opens an entrance to many truths, invitations and holy warnings, which heretofore had rebounded from the closed and barred gate. Now the thunder-word eternity receives free entrance. Now, also, are heard the trumpet-calls to judgment, and the cry, "Arise, thou that sleepest." Voices enter that so-long benighted chamber, calling upon the soul to haste for life's sake, and to take the narrow way. Formerly these same voices struck the outside of the heart's door, but entered not therein. Now the spirit has opened the heart, and the call resounds and echoes through all its walls.

Sinner! if you hear these voices, be sure that the Spirit is opening that long closed door of your heart! It is in your power to exclude the heavenly visitor, but if you shut on him the gate of your heart now, remember that he will shut on you the gate of heaven hereafter.—Krummacher.

Fight On!

There are battles fierce and many,
By our valor to be fought,
And we want for soldiers, any
Who will fight as brave men ought;
Not with sword of glittering steel,
Laying waste the fruitful lands,
But with humble, christian zeal,
And the Bible in our hands.

What is due to Woman?

Let man learn to be grateful to woman for this unbounded achievement of her sex, that she, far more than he, and too often in despite of him, has kept Christendom from lapsing back in barbarism; kept mercy and truth from being utterly overborne by those two greedy monsters, money and war. Let him be grateful for this, that almost every great soul that has led forward or lifted up the race has been furnished for each noble deed, and inspired with each patriotic and holy inspiration, by the retiring fortitude of some Spartan, or more than Spartan—some christian mother. Moses, the deliverer of his people, drawn out of the Nile by the King's daughter, some one has hinted, is only a symbol of the way that woman's better instincts always outwit the tyrannical diplomacy of man. Let him carefully remember, that though the sinewy sex achieves enterprise on public theatres, it is the nerve and sensibility of the other that arm the mind and inflame the soul in secret. "A man discovered America, but a woman equipped the voyage." So every where; man executes the performance, but woman trains the man. Every effectual person, leaving his mark on the world, is but another Columbus, for whose furnishing some Isabella, in the form of his mother, lays down her jewelry, her vanities, and her comfort.

Above all, let not man practise upon woman the perpetual and shameless falsehood of pretending admiration, and acting contempt. Let not men exhaust their kindness in adorning her person, and ask in return the humiliation of her soul. Let them not assent to her every high opinion, as if she were not strong enough to maintain it against opposition; nor yet manufacture opinion for her, and force it on her lips by dictation. Let them not crucify her emotions, nor ridicule her frailty, nor crush her individuality, nor insult her independence, nor play off mean jests upon her honor in convivial companies. Let them multiply her social advantages, enhance her dignity, minister to her intelligence, and by manly gentleness, be the patrons of her genius, the friends of her fortune, and the equals, if they can, of her heart.—Rev. F. D. Huntington.

Angelic Perfection.

Who ever saw it, who believes it? Angelic perfection belongs to angels, christian perfection to christians.—"This is the will of God, even your sanctification." The beloved Fletcher says:

Do not confound angelic with christian perfection. Uninterrupted transports of praise, and ceaseless raptures of joy, do not belong to christian, but to angelic perfection. If God indulges you with ecstasies and extraordinary revelations, be thankful for them; be not exalted above measure by them, and remember that your christian perfection does not consist so much in building a tabernacle upon mount Tabor, and enjoying rare sights there, as in resolutely taking up the cross, and following Christ to the palace of a proud Caiphas, to the judgment hall of an unjust Pilate, and to the top of an ignominious Calvary.—Ex.

Reading for Youth.

A Stained Memory.

I think my letter will be mostly to boys, but how shall I persuade them to care for what I say? And, especially, how much will they care, when I urge something a great way off, in the future, as a reason for doing right now? A father was once urging his son to give up a certain wrong thing, and he wished him to feel the reason, as well as to be merely obedient, "because, my son, I do not want you to have a stained memory."

Now, many people feel that we may live as we please; it is not so much matter what we do now, if we only repent at last, or come right before we die. And others say, "Oh, young people must sow their wild oats"—that is, they must go some distance in the wrong road, in order afterwards to turn about and go in the right road. That is not the way we do in life. If we want to go to England, we don't set out for California first, so as to turn about and have much further to go.

Of course, young people cannot be like old people, who are quieted and sobered by all they have seen of life. Young people ought to have plenty of fun, but it should be innocent fun. And I wish we more generally felt and understood that true religion is cheerful and joyful—that if we are delivered from the power of sin and evil, we must rejoice and be glad. Said a little child to me, "I like Mr. G.—— he is not a bit religious—he laughs and says funny things." And yet Mr. G. was an earnest, working, cheerful christian.

Now this is what I want you boys to be. As you grow up, you will have many quiet hours, and your thoughts will turn backward, your memory will be at work—and, as it is pleasantest to remember pleasant things, therefore you should try to have only such to remember. As men grow older, they remember those things that happened when they were young, while later things may have faded away, having made less impression.

Now, don't do anything that will not be pleasant to think of—for you can't forget! How miserable to have always evil things to look upon when you are alone! A stained memory!

A boy once fell overboard from a boat and was nearly drowned. When he was restored and came to himself, he found that all the scenes of his life seemed to have come back to him, even those he had not thought of for years. And he said that in the minutes that he was under water, all his life came before him, the whole passing so rapidly it seemed hours instead of seconds. So it may be, the great pages of the "book of remembrance" are the pages of our own memory, where nothing is lost, but all will come back, to make us happy or unhappy, according to the record we read.

Now every sin, every wrong thing, will leave a stain. I have seen people whose faces looked dark and distressed, and when they were alone or quiet, they did not seem happy; I always thought such people had not pleasant memories. It is like being in a room full of hateful pictures—whichever way you turn your eyes you see them, you cannot help it. The only way is not to have the pictures there.

Now, boys, there are reasons enough for not doing wrong, but is not this a strong one—Not to have a stained memory?—Independent.

How should Little Children Pray?

We will answer this question in the language of some of your own age. A little boy, one of the Sunday school children in Jamaica, called upon the missionary, and stated he had lately been very ill and in his sickness often wished his minister had been present to pray with him.

"But, Thomas," said the missionary, "I hope you prayed yourself?"

"O yes, sir."

"Did you repeat the collect I taught you?"

"I prayed."

"Well, but how did you pray?"

"Why, sir, I begged."

A child of six years old, in a Sunday school, said: "When we kneel down in the school-room to pray, it seems as if my heart talked to God." A little girl about four years of age, being asked, "Why do you pray to God?" replied, "Because I know he hears me, and I love to pray to him." "But how do you know he hears you?" Putting her little hand to her heart, she said, "I know that he does, because there is something here that tells me so."

Ah, children, you may never fully know the power and usefulness of prayer, until you find yourself in trouble and in sorrow; then you will love the mercy-seat better than any other place on earth. But see to it, that you never approach God in prayer, even now, unless you are sincere and earnest; for to ask for what you do not want, would only be mocking the great Jehovah. Do you remember those little verses of the hymn?

"I often say my prayers,
But do I ever pray?
Or do the wishes of my heart
Suggest the words I say!

I may as well kneel down
And worship gods of stone,
As offer to the living God
A prayer of words alone."

—Episcopal Recorder.

"If one lesson won't do, another will."

"Mother," said Mary, "I can't make Henry put his figures as I tell him."

"Be patient, my dear, and not speak so sharply."

"But he won't let me tell him how to put the figures, and he does not know how to do it himself," said Mary, very pettishly.

"Well, my dear, if Henry won't learn a lesson in figures, suppose you try to teach him one in patience. This is harder to teach, and harder to learn, than any lesson in figures, and perhaps, when you have learned this, the other will be easier to both of you.

Mary hung her head, for she felt that it was a shame to any little girl to be fretted by such a little thing, or indeed by any thing; and she began to think that perhaps she deserved to be blamed as much as Henry.

Children very often feel like complaining of their playmates, or brothers and sisters, when they are very much in fault themselves. A fretful, impatient child, makes himself and all about him very unhappy. Will you all try to learn a lesson of patience?

"A fretful temper will divide
The closest knot that can be tied."

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,
Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months	15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for three months for 50 cents, which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of brethren, they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Rules for Correspondents.

Over all matters not intended for publication, write Private.

Over all communications for the paper, write For the Crisis.

Over all business matters, write Business.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to Eld. Miles Grant, Boston, Mass.

The postage on the Crisis, if prepaid, quarterly or yearly, at the office where it is received, will be 13 cents a year to any part of Massachusetts, and 26 cents to any other part of the United States.

☞ Canada Subscribers have to pre-pay the postage on their papers, 26 cents a year, in addition to the above; i. e., $1 will pay for twenty-three numbers, or $2.26 a year. The same to all the Provinces.

"A Light that shineth in a dark place."

When the traveler, worn and weary,
Longing for his destined rest,
Where, amid the dear loved circle
In re-union he is blest,—
'Mid the darkness that o'ertakes him
Spies a dim and distant light,
With what joy his heart is bounding,
And how eager is his sight.

Now he's sure the way before him
Is the one he ought to tread,
And he'll press on with new vigor,
While his doubts and fears have fled;
Onward, and still onward moving,
Brighter, steadier shines the light,
Till it fills his raptur'd vision,
And dear home appears in sight.

Thus the word prophetic lightens
Up the future to our view,
And we know the way before us
Mark'd by prophecy is true;
All without it is but darkness,
Dense and drear to mortal eyes,
Nothing of the future know we,
Nought of what before us lies.

But this light that God has given
Beams in brightness on our way,
And we see, amid the darkness,
Tokens of a joyous day;
That blest haven we are seeking
Rises clear before our eyes,
And with zeal renewed, we hasten
Onward to obtain the prize.

And, the nearer we approach it,
Brighter still the light appears,
Faith makes sure the way before us,
Banishing our doubts and fears.
Praise to God for light prophetic!
To it we may well "take heed,"
For it is a beacon truly,
Blessing to our souls indeed.

For the Crisis.

Fraternizing.

The band of brotherhood which unites christians is most sweet, gives strength and comfort, and that sense of security which union bestows. So far so good. But there is a loose and indiscriminate embracing, which taking in more ground than can well be defended, weakens every point, and all along the lines, leaves it vulnerable to attack. It is truly a nice distinction who should be brethren and who not. Yet Christ has given a "place of departure," or stand point, when he says "He that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven the same is my brother," etc.

For my own part I would fraternize with Methodist, Baptist, and all the other denominations of Protestantism, who with what light they have got, are laboring for the evangelizing of the world. But, with popery I have no sympathy or fellowship, not even when it affects moderation and liberality; for I believe it antagonistic to God—the very Antichrist, which would rob the dear Redeemer of his inalienable rights, and give them to a blasphemous pretender, who grasps at heaven's diadem to put it in his pocket.

Some three weeks ago "The Young Men's Christian Association" of Boston invited the Catholic Bishop to deliver a lecture before them; but he, pleading prior engagements, appointed a learned subordinate, who took for his subject "Fenelon and Catholicism."

The lecturer knew well what he was about in singling out the very best man that ever their church recognized, or rather that ever would recognize their church. With a mercy almost unknown among the priesthood, this good man (Fenelon,) accepted the mission of the fierce bigot, Louis XIV., to convert the Protestants of Poitou, on the condition that no force (which the French monarch delighted in) should be used. His works show how much, or rather how little of a Catholic he died.

The discourse of the Rev. priest wound up with a high colored eulogium on the beauties of the Catholic faith, full of liberal sentiments for those who differed from him, and said that if Catholicism were popery he would abjure it—mark it, will you?—for he did not endorse the cruelties inflicted by its persecuting spirit! I thought at the time with all his wily, secret semblances of kindness, purring and turning away his head from the bloody work, like a cat whose bound is impeded by the interposing bars of the cage which surrounds the trembling bird, she sheathes her claws and rubs herself against the impenetrable sanctum as if she did not mean a mite of harm. O no! And the priest further added in the fullness of his liberality. "I never hanged a heretic!" If he had understood the mighty sensation which pervaded the assembly then, he would have paused. He never hanged one! not he, nor would I say that he would if he could; but it is a "family failure"; and I for one, would be like the fox, who replied to the lion's expression of love to his fellow brutes, "I would not trust your skin if it were stuffed." The fox declared the grapes were sour because he could not reach them; and for the very same reason Papists would not hang and burn Protestants, because they are beyond their grasp. Their power is forever gone—the decrepid old giant sits at the entrance of his cave gnashing his fangless jaws, while the weakest power in christendom laughs at the bellowing of his bulls, and with the most bitter contempt tramples his insolent mandate in the dust.

"How like a fawning publican he looks"

"Come out from among them and be ye separate—touch not the unholy thing!" Have no brotherhood with the minions of Antichrist. Preach to them mercy—preach to them forgiveness, and life through Christ alone, without the meddling of saints or virgins, but let them not desecrate your pulpits with their schisms, or lay their blood-stained hands upon your altars.

"The Death and Resurrection of Jesus Christ."

A LECTURE BY WM. GLEN MONCRIEFF, LONDON, C. W.

Being a reply to the Westminster Review, No. 135, Article 5.

Delivered before the Young Men's Christian Instruction Society of London, March, 1860.

(Concluded.)

Before his ascension to heaven he had been seen in different localities, and in one instance by no less than "five hundred brethren at once." When he left the world the eleven were present: the event occurred after they had been in close conversation with him, and just when he was giving them his final blessing: it happened not in darkness, when they might have been deceived by an apparition, but in open day, and on an elevated ground, whence they distinctly beheld him in royal majesty glide calmly through the fields of space, till lost in the depths of the unfathomable azure. Eleven simple, honest, truthful men were witnesses of the sublime occurrence; and ever afterwards referred to it as being to them no less indubitable than the shining of sun, and moon and stars. Let us grant it to be unparalleled in the history of our race; but surely the depositions of the spectators need stagger no one who can believe that Jesus survived a crucifixion and a spear-thrust; an envelopment in grave-clothes, and confinement, with rankling wounds, in a stifling vault.

Not many days after his departure, Peter, along with his associates, appeared in the thoroughfares of Jerusalem, and protested that Jesus, whom the rulers had crucified. was risen from the dead. He charged them with murdering his Lord; and showed that by reanimating his Son, God in heaven had pronounced him innocent, and his oppressors guilty. It was an appalling oration. The whole metropolis was thrown into commotion: vast multitudes believed the witnesses and bowed to the dominion of the translated Messiah. The authorities commanded the preachers to be silent; but they would make no compromise;—they would submit to the will of God rather than man, let the consequences follow as they might. How different it would have been had these men departed to China, or India, or Gaul, and proclaimed the resurrection of Jesus: an opportunity would then have been given to a man like the Reviewer to exclaim, "they were too prudent to attempt a ministry in Jerusalem, where every statement they uttered could be instantly exposed"! But in Jerusalem they actually did commence; and soon as they spoke, the testimony ran.

If our Lord was not resurrected, the Apostles were insane to defy the authorities, who, they must have been aware, had a host of facts wherewith to annihilate their pretensions. For what did they ordain a watch at the tomb? Was it not to meet just such an emergency as this? And now was their time. Let them bring forward the Roman guard to declare the seal was never broken: let them exhibit the remains of Jesus, and in one hour Peter and his confederates are overwhelmed in disgrace. But in lieu of evidence to shield the populace from deception—instead of saving their flock out of regard for their fleece at any rate, they fulminate against the speakers; and while the flame-crowned witnesses are sublimely heroic, the high powers skulk into retirement, and are agued with fear.

It has been well observed by a masterly writer, that "If Christ did not rise from the dead, most assuredly he did not preach to them (his disciples) after his crucifixion; upon which supposition, I apprehend, it must be very difficult to account for their returning to their faith in that Master, whom in distress they had abandoned and disowned. But if Christ did rise from the dead, and did, after his resurrection, converse with his Apostles, I suppose it will be easily granted, that they had sufficient reason for believing in him, and for acting in obedience to the command given them by him, to preach the gospel throughout the world, especially when they found themselves so well qualified for that important commission by the miraculous powers conferred upon them by the Holy Ghost, and particularly the gift of tongues, so apparently and so easily calculated to carry on that great and universal service."

These men persisted to the last—and holy, self-denying men they were—in their undaunted and harmonious protestations that the hope of the world had returned a conqueror from the kingdom of hades: with probably only one exception they sealed their testimony with their blood. Be it observed, it was not an opinion they died for; they were martyrs primarily to a fact—the resurrection of their Lord. Men may resign their breath in defence of conjectures as to the nature of a Trinity: the action of a Holy Spirit in conversion; the authorized form of ecclesiastical polity, and the perplement of the stars; but their martyrdom in such instances is logically no more than a demonstration of the sincerity and intensity of their opinions,—no sweeping assurance of their truth; but when a company of excellent men submit to a death of agony rather than revoke what their eyes have seen, and their ears have heard, and their hands have handled, we have not merely the utmost evidence of sincerity, but the highest conceivable reason, based on human testimony, to esteem their affirmations eternal verities.

Nothing could these men gain by attesting what in their conscience they knew to be false: their preaching conducted them to scorn, and poverty, and suffering, and death. Were these a prize to reward an imposition with? That they should act as they did in propagating an invention of their fancy would be more astonishing than the very truths they announced. In a lie there is no courage, no nutriment, no fire, no force: mostly does it resemble a wind-bag, fit for no mortal purpose beneath the sky.

There stands on the field of Waterloo a giant monument, and in one of the streets of London a column having at its top a carved emblem of flames; the one commemorates the European battle in which Napoleon was overthrown; the other the great fire by which a large portion of the English metropolis was desolated. Would any person ever suppose that merely by erecting these monuments the world would have been convinced that an engagement had taken place, or that flames had raged to such a terrific extent? The sculpture in both instances presupposes the events, and the marble lion and the marble flames are enduring records of their anterior existence. Well, then, it is an acknowledged fact that ever since the date when our Lord is said to have appeared, the simple ordinance of the Eucharist has been solemnly commemorated by his followers. That ordinance, was intended to commemorate his death, which took place; to foreshadow likewise his return to judgment (which presupposes his resurrection), since according to Paul it is to be observed till his reappearing in glory. "As often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup ye do show the Lord's death till he come."

Will any mortal have the audacity to affirm that the primitive Christians, of whom mention is made by the Roman historian Tacitus, as well as the Jewish Luke, began this celebration, but without a reason—erected this monument descending the stream of time to commemorate nothing? There was a time when the institution was first observed, and the impelling motive was the command of Jesus; but if he had not returned from the grave, what was there to commemorate in one who had disappointed their hopes, and left them a prey to agonizing fears? Inevitably they must soon have forgotten him. Some of the first generation might have recalled his services with gratitude; but we may hazard the assertion that the next would have cancelled his fame. On the supposition that Jesus rose from the dead—that, in fact, things just happened as they are ingeniously described by different pens, the existence of Christianity can alone be explained; his exit from the tomb is the necessary cause of a stupendous result, that, like the circles in a lakelet when a stone is cast upon its bosom, has endured and spread for nearly two thousand years.

Those who assail the resurrection of Jesus are like a battle-ship firing at a rocky island—wasting their ammunition and causing only the sea-gulls to tremble. The doctrine of his revivification stands on the page of history as indubitable as the Fall of Babylon, or the poisoning of Socrates. Many have tried to sink it beneath the waves of oblivion, but there it rises with ancient stability. It is the wonder of heaven, and the Pharos of the world. It is enrolled among the facts of the universe, that none can dismember, none annihilate. Yonder in the far past the occurrence stands, an eternal verity, looking down on the world as Mount Blanc, with its "diadem of snow," looks on the vale of Chamouni. It may be ignored, but there it shines: cursed it may be, but from it comes to the recipient mind what bonied blessings it contains. The sacred writers have given us an explanation of the resurrection, and drawn inferences from it, and if these are unsatisfactory, yea, if they are even preposterous, my advice to thinkers is, furnish us, if you can, with a better explanation and with better inferences: at all events, leave us the fact itself in its majestic proportions, and pregnant significance.

Christianity, in her own native and divine simplicity, invites the most rigid investigation; let genius, and acumen, and learning come up to the task, she has nothing to fear. Her pretensions are lofty, nevertheless they can be sustained. But let the investigation be fair, not partial, not malignant. Contradict it who may, it is hard to get justice from opponents; they would determine her claims and her virtues after the ancient Gothic custom of trying witches. The old woman suspected was tied hand and foot and cast into the water. If she swam, then she was instantly carried off to be burnt as a witch; if she sank, then indeed she was acquitted of the charge, but drowned in the experiment.

But it is time to close. Exercising that independence of thought which is the birthright of every man, and believing that simple, untrammelled individualism in religion is the noblest form of piety, I protest in my own name—and because I am so independent in my religious views and habits, my protest may have a little more weight with liberal minds than if it came from the organ of a sect, or a professional dependant on Christianity—I protest against this rude attempt of an unknown writer to dash out with one sweep of his pen the great facts of sacred history. Though I have sometimes ridiculed his far-fetched theories, my excuse is, that I am acquainted with no better method of encountering such an antagonist; and it cannot fail to bring me consolation, primarily because in that case augmented stability must have been given your faith, if by the sword of truth in our feeble hands the Reviewer's arguments are so wounded, that not even Pilate's cordials and surgery could revive them.

Gospel of the Kingdom.

"And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations: then shall the end come."—MATT. 24: 14.

Jesus preached the gospel of the kingdom in all the Jewish synagogue, Matt. 4: 23, and all the prophets, apostles and holy men of old spoke of the restoration of the kingdom to Israel since the world began. See Acts 1: 6, and 3: 21. We are told, Dan. 7: 27, "And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom." And again, Rev. 11: 15, "And the seventh angel sounded, and there were great voices in heaven, saying, the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ, and he shall reign forever." Jesus is gone into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom, and return, Luke 19: 12; and likewise Daniel saw in the night visions, and "behold one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and to the ancient of days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion and glory, that all people, nations and languages should serve him; his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed."—Dan. 7: 13, 14.

This kingdom was prepared from the creation of the world, and the dominion thereof given to the first Adam. Gen. 1: 26. The same kingdom is to be restored by Jesus, the second Adam, our coming King, who will say to his children, "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."—Matt. 25: 34.

Now the gospel that is preached among the nations is a gospel without a kingdom. They say the kingdom is the church, and the kingdom is within you, and the kingdom is in heaven above the stars. Note this is a different gospel from Paul's,—and he says they that preach such will be accursed, Gal. 1: 8, 9; and it is adding to God's word, and he says of such, he will add to them the plagues that are written in his book. Rev. 22: 18. It is likewise taking from the words of his book. See the punishment in Rev. 22: 19, and Prov. 30: 6.

Truly did Paul say they shall be turned away from the truth, and turned into fables. Well did Isaias prophecy of them, saying, "This people draweth nigh unto me with their mouth, and honoreth me with their lips, but have removed their heart far from me, and their fear toward me is taught by the precept of men." Look well to yourselves, brethren; follow Christ and his apostles' doctrines, for those that abide not in the doctrine of Christ have not God. "He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son."

Thoughts

SUGGESTED ON SEEING A PICTURE OF HAGAR AND HER SON.

Outcast, forsaken, friendless, forth she goes
To the wide world,—a homeless wanderer.
Hope resteth not within her aching heart;
But anguish that a mother only knows
Is hers. For she hath laid her darling child,
Her only son, amid the desert heath
To die;—then turned herself aside to weep
Alone. She cannot see him perish.
But lo! a heavenly voice bids hope arise
And joy within her heart. Life springs anew;
For God hath heard her cry, and sent his angel
With deliverance.

How oft 'mid life's rough journey,
Doth the pilgrim traveler faint with toil
And watching, while his eye, resting on things
Of earth, finds no relief. Light has gone out;—
His trembling heart no consolation knows,
And comfort, joy and peace, seem fled for aye.
To God he lifts his voice,—pours his complaints;
And not in vain he cries; from out the clouds
Which hang with midnight darkness o'er his steps,
Glory bursts forth and gilds his pathway.
His night to day is turned, weakness to strength,
Sorrow and sadness to the glorious hope
And joy and peace, which faith in God inspires.
From earth the solace comes not,—but from heav'n.
Pilgrim, rejoice; man liveth not by bread
Alone; but every word proceeding from
The mouth of God, with holy energy,
With heavenly, quickening power is fraught.

"Reasons for my Hope."

The following is from Bro. Hasting's interesting work, entitled, "REASONS FOR MY HOPE." Every lover of truth should have a copy.—ED.

At length the art of printing was discovered. The first book ever printed was the Book of books, the Book of God, by Faust and Guttenberg, at Metz, between the years 1450 and 1455. It was the first fruits of a glorious harvest. Other impressions followed,—probably as many as one hundred and fifty small editions before the time of Luther. In 1472 the printers, in a petition, complaining of their poverty to Sixtus IV., stated that an edition of a theological work (including the Bible) consisted of five hundred and fifty copies. There must have been then, at a moderate calculation, some sixty thousand copies of the Scriptures circulated, partly in Latin and partly in modern languages, before the reformation.

These volumes, scattered through the lands, had in them the germs of a new life for man. They quickened the dormant souls of those who sat in darkness. Luther arose. In the Castle of Wartburg he translated his German Testament. "Let this one book," said he, "be on all tongues, in all hands, under all eyes, in all pens, and in all hearts." "Hearken, O man! my brother!—God, the creator of heaven and earth, speaks here to thee." He finished the New Testament and was set at liberty. Melancthon assisted to revise it. Three presses were employed to print it, and ten thousand sheets were struck off in a day. At last, on the 21st of Sept., 1522, three thousand Testaments were ready and were given to the world. Other editions succeeded this, one in the December following, and sixty-eight within ten years. When the New Testament was printed they commenced to translate the old, and in 1530 the whole Bible issued from the press.

Other versions followed. In 1666 the French Jesuits threw De Sacy into prison. For two years and a half, within the gloomy walls of the old Bastile, he labored in translating the Bible. It was finished one night, and the next day he was set free. God maketh the wrath of man to praise him. This version is regarded by very many "as the most perfect version in the French or in any other tongue."* Like Bunyan's Pilgrim, it was prison work. From 1550 to 1600 Le Long reckons no fewer than 157 editions of Bibles or Testaments printed in French.

Wicliffe's first version of the Bible in English, in 1380, though not printed, was yet circulated in manuscript. The earliest Scripture printed in English was the seven Penitential Psalms, by Bishop Fisher, 1505. About this time arose William Tyndale, a man of learning, piety, and high and holy purpose. When once a priest said to him, "We are better without God's laws than the Pope's," he replied, "I defy the Pope and all his laws .... If God spare my life, ere many years, I will cause the boy who driveth the plow to know more of the Scriptures than you do."† Disturbed by priests in Gloucestershire, he sought another place where he might perform his work. He thought of the Bishop of London, praised exceedingly by Erasmus, "whose tongue maketh of little gnats great elephants," but there was no place for Tyndale in that quarter, and he says he "understood at last, not only that there was no room in my Lord of London's palace to translate the New Testament, but also that there was no place to do it in all England. Room enough there was in my Lord's house for belly-cheer, but none to translate the New Testament." Preserved for a while from actual want by the kindness of Humphrey Monmouth, he at length sailed to Hamburgh in 1524. The following year he was at Cologne, passing through the press the first New Testaments ever printed in the English tongue. Betrayed there, he snatched some copies of his incomplete Testaments from the press, and started with all speed in a passing boat for Worms, where he in safety finished his work, and issued the first English Testament ever published, about 1526. Multitudes of these were sent to England. Some were bought and burned, others filled their places—in 1530 Tyndale published the pentateuch; in 1534 a version of Jonah; but he never finished the Old Testament. Hated by the enemies of God, and an exile from his own land, betrayed by an infamous Judas named Philips, he was taken to Vilvord Castle near Brussels:—kept there in prison a year or two, he busied himself with preparing a version of the New Testament in provincial orthography, that plow-boys could understand; and at last, in Sept., 1536, he was led forth to execution, strangled, and thrown into the flames, his last words being, "Lord, open the king of England's eyes." That prayer was answered, and in less than one year "Matthew's Bible," containing Tyndale's New Testament and Pentateuch, which had been by that king prohibited, were issued openly in England, as the version which all might read and possess, superseding the subsequent one of Bishop Coverdale, and being as the titled declared, "set forth by the king's most gracious license." "And thus Henry VIII. unwittingly afforded his public sanction to the man whom he had persecuted through life and permitted to die a felon's death on a foreign shore!" And though afterward, under this same king, parliament again prohibited the Bible, yet during the twenty years of his reign as many as fifty editions were issued, and during the brief seven years of the reign of his successor, Edward VI., there were published as many more.‡ "So mightily grew the word of God and prevailed."

In the 17th century 940 editions of the Bible in the languages of modern Europe, are enumerated, (not one of which were printed at Rome,)—in the same century 2050 editions of the Bible, or parts of the Bible, were issued in the oriental and Latin tongues, (and all but twenty-four of them beyond the reach of the Papal power.) In the 250 years after the Reformation, the Scriptures were translated in Europe into twenty-two languages more; and some four or five millions of copies in all languages were printed during the same period.

With this brief survey we come to the close of the eighteenth century. Up to that time from four to six million copies of the Holy Scriptures, in about thirty different languages, comprise all that had ever been issued since the world began. In 1779, there was not a Bible Society in the world, and after all that had been done, there were not, at that time, for all the teeming myriads of mankind, more than four millions of Bibles in circulation in the world.

"In Prison, and ye Visited me."

BRO. GRANT:—During the month of July, it was my privilege to visit the city of Jeffersonville, for the purpose, among other social interests, of mingling my sympathies with the convicts of the Prison. Accordingly the next day after my arrival, which was the Sabbath, in company with the Chaplain and other religious friends, I made my way to the great white house whose massive walls and grated windows, as we approached them, gave to the mind a sensation of sadness, to know that within this formidable enclosure, nearly five hundred human beings were confined as a result of violating the laws of the land. The carriage stopped, and we entered the hall, where we were kindly met by the Warden, who ushered us through the large iron door into the Chapel room, where a motley group of all sizes and almost all ages were waiting to listen to the word of God. The subject chosen by the minister was the glad tidings of the gospel; and never did the glorious message of salvation contained therein appear more appropriate than on that solemn occasion. The stillness was almost profound, and the attention given by the listeners showed that they were interested. At the close of the services, I presented a large bundle of religious tracts, which I had procured from Cincinnati for the purpose of distributing among the prisoners. The minister gave them out in quick time with a suitable comment on their use, accompanied with the wish that they would improve the silent messenger to their spiritual benefit and the glory of God. They were then remanded to the solitude of their gloomy cells, where alone they must spend the remainder of the day.

We were then shown the female department, where private services are held apart from the general congregation. And now comes the most interesting part of my humble letter. We found sixteen sad faces of our own sex waiting to hear the words of chistian kindness and sympathy, which we had come to bring. Never did I attend a more interesting meeting, nor behold a more attentive and penitent audience. And as one after another was permitted to speak to them the words of eternal life, their tears of sorrow began to flow; while their sighs and sobs of anguish were audible all over the room. We all felt that the influence of the Holy Spirit was truly present sealing the truth to many hearts before us. We mingled our prayers and tears with theirs, interspersing the services with the songs of Zion, whose rich melody seemed to fill the souls of all present with the conviction that God was truly in our midst. When the meeting closed, and we must take leave of our mournful charge, in imitation of the blessed Savior, who when he blest little children put his hands upon them, we took them all one by one cordially by the hand, expressing our sympathy and desires for their spiritual welfare, with the promise of visiting them again if life should be spared. Their gratitude seemed to know no bounds for the attention shown them, and they seemed with reluctance to let us go, expressing the wish that we might always stay with them. But the bounds of a single letter could not convey to you the interest of that most impressive and important occasion, and I only present it before you, with the hope of waking up an interest in the minds of christians relative to the duty of visiting those confined in our public prisons. Rest assured, it is not labor thrown away, as many suppose, but seed sown in good ground which will doubtless bring forth fruit to the glory of God.

As an encouragement to labor among this unfortunate class, I will mention that I received a letter from the Chaplain since my return, informing me that there has been a decided change in their conduct since that memorable interview. The matron also informed me at a second visit, during my stay, that they had been engaged in holding daily prayer meetings among themselves, and appeared cheerful and obedient to all her orders.

O! how much good might christians do, if they would more willingly imitate the example of Him who "went about doing good," and with Job, the "cause they know not of seek out." It is truly astonishing that while almost every other duty is cheerfully remembered, that of visiting those in prison is forgotten. One young man whom I had known in his youth, had seen him at the age of eight years buried with Christ in baptism, had heard his youthful voice mingling in the prayer circle, but who in an hour of temptation fell from his high position by listening to the voice of the tempter, and now was a poor, sorrowful convict,—said, in all his adversity no one among all his professed friends had remembered him either by letter or a visit, save myself and one other, and it had made him almost doubt the reality of christianity. O! shall we not wake up as out of sleep, and strive by our frequent and loving efforts to cheer the outcast, relieve the oppressed, and make the world the better for our having lived in it? that at the coming of the Master, we may hear the welcome plaudit, "Well done, good and faithful servant; enter into the joys of thy Lord."

The Lord's Supper.

Our divine Redeemer instituted this ordinance to be observed by his disciples "until he comes" to receive us to himself in his kingdom.—1 Cor. 11 : 23—26. His design was the continual "remembrance," in our too forgetful hearts, of his dying and living love for us.

Accordingly, we find that all "who gladly received the word" of the truth of the gospel, "were baptized," and continued "steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers."—Acts 2 : 42. How "steadfastly" they continued in the observance of these precious privileges for the honor of their Master and their own edification and holy rejoicing, we learn from Acts 20 : 7.—"And upon the first day of the week (not on the first Sunday of the month or quarter year) when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached to them," etc. It is not written that Paul administered to them whatsoever part he might have taken therein.* To an unsophisticated mind, the plain teaching here is, that it was the custom for the disciples of the Lord Jesus Christ at Troas, to come together every first day of the week to break bread and attend to the other ordinances of divine worship, as we read, Acts 2 : 42. This frequency of the observance of the Lord's supper is confirmed also in 1 Cor. 11: 20.—"When ye come together therefore into one place, this is not to eat the Lord's Supper, for in eating every one taketh before other his own supper," etc.; i. e., their disorderly manner was not the right way of observing the ordinance. The passage implies, that the professed design and duty of their coming together, was to eat the Lord's Supper. That this was the practice of the christian churches in general, we learn from the fact that the inspired apostles taught the same things "in every church."—1 Cor. 4 : 17.

Now, beloved brethren, it is a fact worthy of our serious consideration, that although the disciples, when they assembled on the first day of the week, attended to christian ordinances in general, the breaking of bread is the only ordinance which is mentioned as the special object of their coming together. They "came together to break bread."—Acts 20 : 7; 1 Cor. 11 : 20. Can it then be right to omit three-fourths or more of the time, the very ordinance which was the chief design of the assembling of the saints according to our only rule of faith and practice? From 1 Cor. 11 : 33 we learn that the Supper was first observed after assembling. It was not put in the back-ground. Is not this divine institution the memorial of the Father's love, in the unspeakable gift of his only begotten Son to die for us, and of the love of the good Shepherd in laying down his life for the sheep? Is it not the memorial of the great fact, which constitutes the foundation of all our hope of deliverance from the second death, and of our immortality in the promised kingdom of God?

Have we not been corrupted from the simplicity which is in Jesus Christ, by allowing "lords over God's heritage" to make their presence and service essential to the disciples' enjoyment of the privileges their Lord has given them? I do not indeed question the sincerity of some, who, through the power of tradition, really suppose that none but an ordained elder has the right to baptize and to break the sacramental loaf. But I do affirm that they have no more scriptural authority for supposing it, than they have for supposing that none but an ordained elder has a right to pray or read the holy scriptures in the congregation.

Christian churches existed before officers were appointed, and had elders ordained in them.—Acts 14 : 23. In the absence of plain evidence of the contrary, we must believe that, previous to the appointment of elders, they "came together to break bread," as well as to pray and sing and to exhort one another. And why not, we may ask? Cannot a christian brother give thanks for the bread and the cup, or for the sacred blessings of which they are the emblems? Where there are elders in churches, it is proper for them to preside in the observance of christian ordinances; but they have no power to impart virtue to these emblems, as popish priests pretend.

As civil governors are appointed for the better enjoyment of our property, which is our antecedent right, so church officers are appointed for the better observance and enjoyment of the antecedent rights of disciples. Until officers are appointed, every assembly of "two or three" believers have a right, and are bound in duty to come together on the first day of the week to break bread, pray, sing, read the sacred Scriptures and exhort one another in the best manner they can, according to the ability God has given. In doing so, with holy motives to glorify their Father in heaven, they have the promise of the presence of their Redeemer, an ample remuneration for all the opposition of modern Sanballats and Tobiahs.

Jesus Christ has connected baptizing with preaching.—Matt. 28 : 19. Philip, who baptized the eunuch, was not an ordained elder. He was one of the seven appointed to attend to "the daily ministration" of temporal things.—Acts 6 : 1—5. Having preached Jesus unto the Ethiopian, who declared his belief that "Jesus Christ is the Son of God," he immersed him into his name.

Dear christian brethren, the honor of our blessed Master, and our own spiritual welfare demand our return to the simplicity of the New Testament of Jesus Christ. Let us, like the first christian churches, come together "on the first day of the week" "to break bread," and to exhort one another, lifting up holy hands in prayer and thanksgiving, singing, not by proxy, but with grace in our hearts, making melody to the Lord. For christians, who are able to exhort and admonish one another to shut up their house of worship, or to neglect the breaking of bread, because they have no ordained elder, is a lamentable renunciation of duty and privilege. As the light of the world for the salvation of the perishing, we are thus directed to hold forth the word of life, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless, looking for the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ, to whom be glory forever. Amen.

* The breaking and eating of bread by Paul, Acts 20:11, was not the ordinance of the Lord's Supper; it was his individual act, (of eating for his sustenance,) before his departure on second day morning. [illegible]

For the Crisis.

Notes by the Way.

After my trip to Machiasport, by request of Bro. Cottle I consented to visit Scituate harbor. This was a barren place, especially to think of getting the present truth to take root. The Methodists had the ground there, and felt quite safe and independent. The preacher felt above uniting to labor for a reformation, when requested by Bro. Cottle. All kinds of influences seemed in the way of the work of God,—political excitement, temperance meetings, torch-light processions, etc. A union protracted meeting had just commenced among the Congregationalists and Baptists, and their notice was sent to me on Sunday to read. The Unitarians had just got a fine, popular minister. These all having their attractions, left us a small chance, holding the unpopular views we did.

But we commenced under these unfavorable circumstances, with but a very few out. Bro. Cottle and wife were all that I know of who were in sympathy, and praying for God's work to break out. I got the blues, and concluded to leave unless the work started at the next meeting. Unexpectedly, Bro. Cottle's daughter astonished us by arising and telling how wicked she had been; she had hated God and requested prayers. This flew around the place like electricity. Others started; a number came out and confessed Christ very boldly; this turned the current, and encouraged us to hold meetings another week. Sunday, the 4th, two were baptized; God setting his seal to the ordinance by giving the Holy Ghost on coming out of the water, especially to Sr. Cottle. It was remarked by many they never saw such beauty on her before. This was noticed and mentioned by the unconverted. The devil was troubled and commenced slandering; but the truth took effect in many hearts. I providentially got a job to build a water wheel, that helped me to stay longer. I worked days and preached evenings, the interest increasing all the time.

I left the 13th to preach in East Boston. While among my good friends in that place I was nearly sick with a cold, which I took while working in a damp wheel pit. But the brethren helped me greatly with some twelve good warm exhortations, after preaching about twenty-eight minutes. Had a good attendance during the day and evening, although very rainy. Bro. White keeps his flock well fed with good wholesome food.

On returning, found the congregation had increased, but unwilling to yield to the Spirit of God's truth. The two young converts were very strong and happy, and warned their friends with good effect to escape the wrath to come. A few others took hold well; but this is a hard place, filled with sectarianism, bigotry and the devil. Bro. Cottle and family made me think of Lot in Sodom, except a more stable wife, who would not look back if the world was on fire.

On the third Sabbath, Bro. Clapp from Boston came down and assisted greatly in carrying on the meeting. I baptized one more on the Sabbath. This was another good time at the water, for God set his seal to this Bible ordinance. Sunday evening the hall was full, and the best attention was given. The truth took effect, and will show itself more fully hereafter.

I left Tuesday morning for Boston, thanking God for the work he had done in that hard place, and the kindness of the friends there. They helped me in a godly manner.

☞ A man struggling against christianity when under conviction, is like a fractious child struggling against a dear mother, when she reproves and punishes it, until, overcome by discipline, it rushes into her arms, and kisses her with a paroxysm of tears, and sobs even when it sleeps.

☞ Do not conclude the Lord is not with you because things go very contrary, and he does not appear for you; he was in the ship notwithstanding the storm, and the disciples thought of perishing.

AN EXPOSITION OF THE 17TH CHAP. OF REV.

No. 5.

"Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secrets unto his servants the prophets."—AMOS 3: 7.

Having considered the woman and "the beast that carrieth her," we pass to notice "the ten horns" associated with the beast. The prophecy reads as follows:—

"And the ten horns which thou sawest are ten kings, which have received no kingdom as yet; but receive power as kings one hour with the beast. These have one mind, and shall give their power and strength unto the beast. These shall make war with the Lamb, and the Lamb shall overcome them; for he is Lord of lords and King of kings; and they that are with him are called, and chosen, and faithful. And he saith unto me, The waters which thou sawest, where the whore sitteth, are peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues. And the ten horns which thou sawest upon the beast, these shall hate the whore, and shall make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh, and burn her with fire. For God hath put in their hearts to fulfill his will, and to agree, and give their kingdom unto the beast, until the words of God shall be fulfilled."

In Wicklife's translation, which is the oldest into English, the last part of verse 12 reads, "One hour after the beast." The Rheims translation is the same. One point should be noticed, which is, that these "ten kings" had "received no kingdom" at the time when John sees the woman supported by the sixth head; hence it appears that these ten must do their part of the work after the seventh head comes into power. Indeed, the context seems to clearly indicate that their whole work named in the prophecy, is to be accomplished after the healing of the wounded seventh head. This being true, these ten kings cannot be the ones on Daniel's fourth beast, three of which were plucked up to make room for the "little horn," or Papal power; for those in Daniel arose and commenced their work more than thirteen hundred years before the woman arrived in her history to where John saw her in this vision. It is also evident that these ten kings of Rev. 17 do not represent any of the great powers of Europe, because the latter have existed as kingdoms for centuries. These ten are to exist, as such, but a short space—"one hour." A part of their work is to make the harlot church "desolate," "and burn her with fire," hence their work is near the end of the christian dispensation. We think they synchronize with the ten toes of the metallic image in the second chapter of Daniel, and are the ones to be in existence when the "stone" smites the image and breaks it "to pieces." This long-looked-for event is evidently just at hand.

That part of the image of Daniel symbolized by the legs, feet, and toes, is Roman; hence we conclude that the last part of the Roman empire will be occupied by the toes. But the Roman Empire for some time has been confined to Italy; consequently, there is the place to look for the toes of the metalic image and the "ten horns," or "ten kings," that were to hate "the mother of harlots," who is "drunken with the blood of the saints."

Let us look at the geographical and political condition of Italy, and see if we find the ten toes, or "ten kings," mentioned in the prophet, which should "receive power as kings one hour with the beast." The prophetic language should be closely observed. They were to "receive power AS [or like] kings" for a short space. These are to unite and "give their power and strength unto the beast," or aid him in his purposes. The beast here mentioned must be the last husband of the woman, when its eighth head is ruling.

At this point, we will quote from an exposition of this prophecy by J. F. Bird, a defender of the Roman Catholic religion. He says:—"By the late Italian war—the war of 1859—the same two Catholic powers [France and Austria] that altered, broke up, or joined the toes, have now repaired and arranged them again. Now, after the war in Italy, the Catholics have got all their kingdoms—all the toes—ready, already to be given up. The Italian war of 1859 was, as it were, for this very purpose, and it ceased suddenly when this object was accomplished. The Italian war raised up an additional kingdom—the kingdom of Venetia . . . . . So that viewing the late Italian war of 1859 in a Scriptural point of view, the object of it was to get the toes of the statue— . . . . ten Catholic kingdoms—ready for the beast."

The writer considers Mohammedanism the beast, and says he "will come to his end" in 1868, when the Roman Catholic church will be delivered by the second coming of Christ.

We now inquire for the ten divisions of Italy, which are to "receive power as kings one hour with the beast." At the close of the war of 1859 they were as follows:—

1. The kingdom of Sardinia.
2. The kingdom of Lombardy.
3. The kingdom of Venetia.
4. The kingdom of Illyria.
5. The duchy of Parma.
6. The duchy of Modena.
7. The grand duchy of Tuscany.
8. The republic of San Marino.
9. The States of the Church.
10. The kingdom of Naples, including Sicily.

What are these "toes" or kings to do? They are to sympathize with the beast, and give him "their power and strength." They are to "have one mind" in this matter. It is well known that they assisted Napoleon in driving out the Austrians in 1859, and he is undoubtedly co-operating with them in freeing Italy from the Papal yoke, while he pretends to defend him by his troops at Rome. It is evident that the French Emperor is conniving at the movements of Garibaldi in suppressing the Papacy.

When speaking further of the work of these ten horns, the prophet says:—"These shall hate the whore, and shall make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh, and burn her with fire. For God hath put in their hearts to fulfill his will, and to agree and give their kingdom unto the beast, until the words of God shall be fulfilled." It should be observed that these ten horns together constitute one kingdom, i. e., the Roman. At the time John saw this vision, before this kingdom was under the control of these ten kings, he says, they "have received no kingdom as yet." It will be noticed that the word kingdom is in the singular number. But after they receive it, or when it comes under their control, they are "to agree and give their kingdom unto the beast." All the toes make up "the kingdom," which is to unite with the beast under the rule of its eighth head, and assist in making the harlot "desolate and naked."

The question now arises, is this work of the ten horns past, present, or future? Their hatred has certainly commenced; it is intense, and we need not stop to adduce proof. It is known to the whole civilized world, and the hatred is continually increasing. We next inquire, has this hatred begun to show itself in outward acts, as expressed by the words, "make her desolate and naked"? When a harlot is made "desolate and naked," her lovers and supporters become her haters, she is neglected, becomes poor, and her filthiness is exposed only to be an object of greater contempt, with whom none but the most degraded will associate. Is this now the condition of the church on "the seven hills?" So it appears. The kings who once sustained, now hate her; and seem ready to "eat her flesh, and burn her with fire." If the flesh of an individual be eaten, it would lessen their size and strength. This is just the work which the ten kings are doing. They have already taken off large pieces. In the Pope's late Allocution he speaks of being in "great anguish" on account of being so "reduced" in territory and strength, by the action of these kings, that he is "unable, without great difficulty, to look after the interests of the church." These "ten horns" have one more great work to accomplish, which is to "burn her with fire." Her terrible end is evidently at hand.

In the eighteenth chapter her closing history is continued, from which we learn that immediately following her destruction, comes "the marriage supper of the Lamb," and the eternal triumph of the saints, which must be preceded by the resurrection of the dead.

It is truly sublime to be living so near such great events. That they are about to transpire is very evident. "The last days" have really come with their terrible accompaniments, which will spread a frightful alarm among "the enemies of the cross of Christ;" but causing "the saints of the Most High" to "rejoice," because "He hath judged the great whore, which did corrupt the earth with her fornication, and hath avenged the blood of his servants at her hand."

Dear reader, are you ready to welcome the Son of Man? Are you among his loyal subjects? Can you say, as did John, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus?"

Where is the Wrong?

In the Herald of Progress, a Spiritualist paper published in New York, and edited by Andrew Jackson Davis, we find the following question: "If there is any wrong in the universe, (moral wrong I mean) who is the author of it?"

The Editor answers:—"Not only of course, but by necessity, nature and its central power, Deity, must be its author."

This being true, it follows as a consequence, that there is no sin in the world; otherwise, our Creator is the sinner; and says John, "He that committeth sin is of the Devil." If the answer is correct, then God is a robber, a thief, a liar, a drunkard, an adulterer, a murderer, etc., and man is innocent. What will people believe next? Truly "this is an age of progress!" ASTONISHING PROGRESS!!

A Bold Assertion.

At a recent meeting in Boston, La Roy Sunderland, formerly a prominent Methodist preacher, since a Spiritualist, when referring to the resurrection of the dead, said:—"If you want to believe in dead carcasses being raised, you may feed your mind on them. I have been born again, redeemed; and have converted more than any other priest."

Bro. D. T. Taylor.

As many of our readers have enjoyed the faithful labors of Bro. Taylor in time past, and feel a deep anxiety in his temporal as well as spiritual welfare, we venture to give his friends a few of his remarks, copied from the Laws of Life, made at the anniversary meeting of the opening of "Our Home," at Dansville, Livingston Co., N. Y. This anniversary of Oct. 1st was the second since the Water Cure, under Dr. J. C. Jackson, was opened; since which time, great success has attended the efforts of the Dr. and his associates. Bro. Taylor is now taking treatment at this health institution, with strong hopes of recovering from a very difficult chronic disease. The following toast was offered for his benefit on the occasion:—

ELD. D. T. TAYLOR:—"May he regain his health; not by patches, but may he be made every whit whole, like a new garment, and so may be able to preach practical discourses that will fit nicely, according to the custom of all good tailors."

Bro. Taylor was called for and said:—"I am glad to be here, glad I came here to tarry instead of going to other Water Cures which I visited. I took up my line of march for this hill-side, and have seen no cause to regret it. In a modified sense of the term, I am satisfied;—satisfied with the place, the people, my doctors, my hard bed, my saltless food, my blessed mush;—satisfied without drugs, satisfied with baths, and the pure, limped water, flowing down from the 'All-healing Spring.' I am glad this Cure was founded, and glad these men founded it. They are just the men to do this deed. I am thankful my lot is thus pleasantly cast with them. I see sick, lonely, and miserable hours; doubtful and doubting hours;—who don't? Then I think of other homes, and my heart goes back to the dear ones afar—mother, sister, brother and friend, and with you I wish myself among them. To-day I realize unto them the sweet words of Moore—

'Some kind voice had whispered I wish he were here.'

But there is 'no cloud so dark but hath a silver lining in it.'"

We would say to Bro. Taylor that we saw his mother and brother, when at Champlain. They were both at our meeting the first Sabbath; but the traveling was so bad the next Lord's day, that his brother thought not best to drive his horse through the mud, but came and returned on foot, upon the R. R. from Rouse's Point,—a distance of four miles. They are well, and striving to be ready for the coming of the Son of man.

"The Crisis of the Union."

The above heading, taken from a leading New York Daily, seems appropriate for these times. That our United States are approaching a "crisis" is certain; and one too of no small magnitude. This fact will be apparent after reading the following extracts from different correspondents in the Southern States. A correspondent from Charlestown, South Carolina, of the 12th inst., when speaking of a gathering on that evening at Institute Hall, says:—"When the speaker declared, 'This Union is dissolved,' the enthusiasm of the people was beyond bounds. They rose to their feet, threw up their hats, and cheered till hoarse." He remarks, "There is no longer any possible doubt that the State will secede . . . . The struggle is over, and we are merely perfecting the secession arrangements." Preparations are being made for arming the State for any emergency. The United States officers of S. C. are resigning their official stations, and a declaration of independence is already drawn up to be presented to the people for acceptance. They have appointed Dec. 17th for holding a State convention, when they purpose to come to a full decision as to their future course of action. All classes are said to be aroused, even "old men and young women and children."

A Richmond (Va.) correspondent says: "The secession movement is going forward with a rush; the popular mind of the South is fired up to the focus of revolution, and the preliminaries are being rapidly arranged and will soon be perfected." "In any event," he says, "secession is looked upon as certain to occur at some period within Mr. Buchanan's term."

A correspondent from Mobile, Ala., Nov. 12th, says:—"The citizens here appear almost unanimously in favor of secession. Several corps of Minute men are organizing."

A Washington correspondent of Nov. 12th, says:—"All the intelligence received from the South to-day indicates hasty and precipitate action on the part of five states—South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi and Florida." These have prepared a series of instructions to be sent to their agent at Paris, who is to lay them before the Emperor Napoleon, for the purpose of inducing him to acknowledge their independence. They wish their agent to say to him, that they "with the whole civilized world, look to him as the defender of oppressed nationalities."

The following manifesto is proposed:—

"We, the representatives of the people of South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Florida and Mississippi, do, in their name and by their authority, agree and declare that, for the reasons hereunto annexed, we deliberately and solemnly announce to the United States and to the civilized world that we no longer owe any allegiance to the United States, but that we are, and of right ought to be, a free and independent Power. And feeling confident that we can justify our action in the eyes of the world, and appealing to the God of nations and of battles as witness to the righteousness of our cause, we do hereby, in the name and by the authority of the people, form and establish ourselves into separate and independent Southern confederacy, to be maintained, if need be, by force of arms, and claiming to be recognized, so soon as our government shall be organized, as a free and sovereign nation, prepared to enter into treaties with foreign powers, to lay impost duties and taxes, to create an army and navy, to coin money, emit bills of credit, and otherwise to perform all acts incident to national sovereignty."

A Strange Resolution.

At the "Speaker's Convention" of Spiritualists, held at Quincy, Mass., Oct. 30, 31st, and Nov. 1st, 1860, the following resolution was offered:—

"Resolved, That man is not totally depraved, as taught by some, neither is he part good and part bad, having an antagonism within himself. But he is wholly and absolutely good, and morally pure, and consequently needs no regeneration, but only development in true wisdom."

Says John in his first letter, when speaking of Christ; "If we say that we have not sinned, we make him a liar, and his word is not in us." Then it follows, if the foregoing resolution is true, that Christ is "a liar."

ANOTHER RESOLUTION. At the United States Infidel Convention, held in New York, on Sunday, Oct. 7th, 1860, the following resolution was presented:—

"Resolved, That infidelity is thus in very truth the proclamation of the most blessed and glorious, the only true gospel ever sounded in human ears—the gospel of human happiness—it is indeed a voice crying to the thousand million weepers in this vale of tears, 'Behold, I bring you glad tidings of great joy, which shall be unto all people; peace on earth, good will to men'—an Oriental dream which the Bible is not, but infidelity is!"

Infidelity is rapidly spreading in all parts of the world, and is presenting a bold front to the truth and its supporters. Let every christian man stand firm, trusting in Him whose "word is truth." The conflict between truth and error, right and wrong, light and darkness, is now an earnest one. Be "valiant for the TRUTH."

For the Crisis.

Argumentum ad Hominem.

A college professor had invented, or devised, a bell-shaped millstone for grinding corn, but which served only as a butt of ridicule for the students. A wag among them called it the Argumentum ad Hominy, and this was the standing joke. And the story may help those readers who are not versed in Latin to remember the wording of the original phrase.

And now for the meaning of it. The English is: The argument to the man himself. When you show that an argument is inconsistent with the opinions of him who offers it, or that it condemns his conduct, or affords matter for his serious consideration, then you employ the argumentum ad hominem. You appeal to what the man himself believes, or to his conscience, or to his self-love. His reasoning may be good enough; but he has no right to condemn you by it until he first confesses himself condemned. Before he can triumph, he must mend his thoughts or his ways.

That our Savior and the inspired writers frequently used this argument is quite certain. And I now write specially to commend Bro. White's tract on the Rich Man and Lazarus, for its reasoning in this direction. Bro. W. regards this parable as describing the real opinions of the Pharisees, respecting the state of the dead. The rich man, they thought, was in actual torment, and Lazarus in blissful enjoyment; and they might remain so, for aught the parable shows, to all eternity. Well, says Christ, if you believe so, this rich man is the very picture of yourselves. Hold the opinion, if you will; but beware of its application; for a Nathan might say again: "Thou art the man." That Christ did not endorse the opinion as correct abundantly appears from his teachings on all other occasions.

Such is the argument in this tract; and for this, and the skill with which it is conducted, it effectually silences the orthodox reasoning from the passage, and is worth its small price several times over.

I have, however, a remark to make respecting the "Discourse concerning Hades" which Bro. W. takes as if written by Josephus, and as giving the opinions of the Pharisees. "For the sake of the argument" we may safely concede this, as Bro. W. well shows. But I have questioned this in my book on Debt and Grace; and I wish to show that this concession for argument's sake need not be made. Whatever the Pharisees believed, their opinions can not be made out from this fragment published with Whiston's Josephus. Whiston makes a long argument to show that Josephus wrote the "Discourse"; but in this view he stands almost, if not altogether alone among modern scholars. And, since people are so apt to regard Josephus as next to the Bible, and to regard the opinions of the Pharisees as sound orthodox doctrine, it is much to be regretted that this fragment should appear as a part of Josephus' works. No Greek edition of his works contains it. And when Josephus can be sold to the people by million copies, for what he is, and for what he is worth (which is also a question), it will be a great reform effected.

I can not here give all the proofs that the "Discourse concerning Hades" was never written by Josephus, but hope to do so at another time. Suffice it to say, it constantly quotes the New Testament, which the Jew Josephus would never have dreamed of doing. Whiston's argument rests partly on this absurd foundation, and partly on the opinion of "some wiseacre of the Byzantine age," as Bunsen calls him, who ascribed the fragment to Josephus. The book from which it is taken was probably written by Hyppolytus, bishop of the Harbor of Rome, about A. D. 225. And he, says Bunsen, "did not give his description of Hades as a revelation, but as a christian picture." That is, as a fancy sketch, answering to Plato's myth in his Gorgias. (Hippolytus and his Age, I. 401, 402.)

C. F. H.

For the Crisis.

A Word to a Wanderer.

A letter which came to me this evening reads as follows:—

Nov. 8th, 1860.

MY DEAR FRIEND:—When I read your earnest appeals to the church of Christ from time to time, to awake from their stupor and be up and doing while the day lasts, I feel that there is need of many such appeals to arouse the slumbering church. Alas! how many are sleeping when they should be fighting the Lord's battles. I feel that it has been so with me, but I am determined by the grace of God to awake and arise, gird myself for the battle, and fight the good fight of faith, that I may lay hold of eternal life through the merits of my Savior.

Ah! little did I think, ten years ago, when your father baptized me, that I should live so far from God; but, alas! I stumbled where I fear many have; instead of taking up my cross and bearing the burden, I endeavored to go around it, and in so doing wandered into many forbidden paths, and slumbered on the enemy's ground; and now when I would return unto my Father's fold, I find the way dark and slippery, beset by many foes who would fain prevent me from reaching my Father's house.

In vain I seek for the peace and joy which I once had in believing. I do not feel that full assurance that I am a child of God, which I wish to, and my heart is not filled with the love of God as I wish it might be. Will you not pray for me, dear friend, that the Lord may forgive all past transgressions, and dispel the darkness and clouds that are hanging over my mind, and that the light of his reconciled countenance may beam in upon my soul, that I may be enabled to glorify him while here below, and meet with his acceptance when he shall come to judge the quick and dead? * * * * Your unworthy friend, C.

MY DEAR SISTER:—Though personally unacquainted with you, or at least unable to recall your name and countenance, I will yet venture to address you a few lines in this public manner, hoping that God may enable me to benefit others beside yourself.

Your case is by no means an extraordinary one. You were converted ten years ago and baptized by my father, whose brown hairs have been pillowed in the dust for nearly seven years. You then was among those who were gathered during the latter part of his service. Perhaps his mind was on you with others, when he battled with disease and strove to live, with this one desire before him, that he might feed the lambs a little longer. I think when he was nearly through his work he said to a friend if he could only have all his children, those who had been added to the Lord under his labors, before him once more, and could preach them all one more sermon, he would die contented. But this could not be. The seed which his hand had sown broad-cast, was too widely scattered ever to be gathered together again until the end—the great harvest day.

"Then when the glorious end,
The day of God shall come,
The angel-reapers shall descend,
And heaven sing Harvest home."

My sister, in that day will you not meet that man of God in the eternal kingdom? I cannot speak to you as he would, were he here, and yet how gladly would I help to do that work which he left unfinished. O if I could but labor with the might that he at times possessed,—but I am but a child,—he was a father in Israel.

Let me still venture to say to you a word of encouragement. You have no doubt learned ere this, that the service of God must be a labor of love. Do you then realize how much the Lord loves YOU? Do not mistake me? I am not speaking of YOUR love to God, that I know has been changeful, transient and fickle, but of HIS love to YOU—the deep, the vast, the unsearchable love of Christ.

Perhaps you have been looking to yourself, to your frames of mind, your feelings and your fancies for abiding comfort. You did not thus learn Christ of my father, I think. Well do I remember his exhorting trembling souls to plant themselves upon the promises of God. "Whosoever cometh unto me will I in no wise cast out." "Stand there," said he, "feel good or feel bad, feel accepted or rejected, stand and believe what God has spoken."

Now, my sister, as you return from your wanderings, drawn by the grace of Christ, will you not make a stand here? Do not look at what you are, but at what Christ is. He is your help. It is not so much matter how severe your illness, how deadly your malady is—but are you touching the hem of the Savior's garment? Here is the cure. Do not think it is worth a thought whether you are a great sinner or a small one; one sin loved and harbored will destroy you,—a thousand can do no more—the grand point is to come to Christ who has power on earth to forgive sin and whose blood cleanseth from all sin. I think if you will learn to have very mean and poor thoughts of yourself, even as the chief of sinners, and very great and glorious thoughts of Christ, as able to save unto the uttermost, the outer-most-all that come unto God by him, it will aid you in the new life which is before you now. And if the great thought of God's love to you fills your heart, your love to him will come as a matter of course, just as streams are full when showers from above descend. Do not doubt then but it will be easy to obey his call, for where love is, there is no labor; and love makes labor light.

You are bought with a price. You are baptized into Christ's death. One died for all,—then all were dead. He redeems us. We should not live to ourselves, but to Christ who died and rose again. We love him because he first loved us, and so our love sprung from his and is great only as we see the greatness of his own tender affection.

If you would live a true christian life you must look to Christ. Not to doctrines, but to Christ. Not to theories, but to Christ. Not to names, but to Christ. Not to human leaders, but to Christ. Not to Calvary, but to Christ. Not to the kingdom, but Christ himself,—a living, personal great High Priest, who now, in this very hour, liveth to make intercession for YOU. He is a reality, not a myth—not a mere idea,—no, a kind, tender, loving Lord—who though he be "God over all, blessed forevermore," is yet "the man Christ Jesus," "touched with the feeling of our infirmities," and "able to succor them that are tempted," faithfully watching us, nor suffering us to be tempted "above what we are able to bear," but with the temptation providing a way of escape that we "may be able to bear it."

Go to him, then, daily. Tell him all your wants, your woes, your sorrows and your tears. Pour out your heart before him and he will surely bless you. Then go into his work. Do not be too timid or too dainty about it. Grasp it quickly as you would a nettle; it won't prick half as bad as if you handle it very carefully. Deny yourself, take up the cross and love it because Jesus bore it, and bore it for you. Then live for him continually.

You need not make resolutions nor promises—Peter tried that and succeeded about as all others have since. Look to Christ and say, "Thou knowest that I love thee," and then he will tell you, "Feed my sheep." Go to his work—work out the salvation that God works within. Obey the word of God. Be led by the Spirit of God, and in doing this you shall be blest here and crowned in the glory of the world to come.

In hope of that day I remain, with prayers in your behalf, your brother in Christ. H. L. HASTINGS.

Human Destiny.

A CRITIQUE ON UNIVERSALISM.

Under this title I have just published my argument in the discussion with Mr. Cobb, as a separate volume. Many of the readers of the Crisis have read it, and some of them have the volume of the entire discussion. But I have reason to think the argument now publishing will be a desirable book. Some of my orthodox friends think very highly of it. Many Advent people may find it convenient in their intercourse with Universalists. And the Universalist Quarterly speaks of Mr. H.'s argument as follows:—

"We can not say that we find it agreeable to see him, as we now do, in the position of an opponent. It is, however, a real mitigation of our regret, that we find in him still the gentleman, scholar, and christian. Perhaps we are the better pleased that his articles, though nominally controversial, are substantially disquisitions. Further, it is a positive satisfaction to read an argument against Universalism that has something of freshness and power. The thread-bare objections to our doctrine, coming from the old-school theologians, we have examined till we grow languid at the taste. Mr. Hudson comes to the question with new arguments, new interpretations of Scripture, and with an array of learning that would be pedantic if it were not so genuine."

This argument makes a book of 136 pages. Price, in paper, 25 cts. In cloth, 44 cts. It is bound with the three following tracts, forming a volume of 216 pages, and sold at 60 cts. "The Rights of Wrong"; "The Rich Man and Lazarus"; and "REVIEWERS REVIEWED." This is a new tract of 36 pages, replying to twelve or fourteen Reviews and other orthodox works; particularly to the Bibliotheca Sacra, the Methodist Quarterly, the Theological and Literary Journal, the Presbyterian Quarterly; briefly to Prof. Hovey; to Mr. Landis on Immortality, Mr. Warren's "Sadduceeism," and Dr. Thompson's "Love and Penalty." Price, in paper, 10 cts.

Sabbath School Books.

Why not have appropriate Sabbath school books for our children? We have nothing now. I supposed the Publishing Association were going to do something, and begin soon. There are men among us that can and will get up the thing we want. Children will read; and remember, our children ought to be taught better than to believe in immortal-soulism, as is taught in all other Sabbath school books. I know of a number of schools that are using the Methodist books for the want of others. Let us strike at the root of Spiritualism in the minds of our children; the sooner the better. HIRAM MUNGER.

Correspondence.

From Dr. J. W. Mitchell.

To the Brethren and Sisters scattered abroad and the church at Yarmouth in particular: Situated as I am in a region where there are very few indeed who hold the like "precious faith" with myself, I sometimes long to break away, and hear the glad tidings of a coming Savior proclaimed with all the sincerity and earnestness which I have seen manifested in times past. But I have the blessed Bible and the Crisis to read (and they go well together), so that I am not alone. O! how my heart has been cheered from week to week, in reading the communications from my brethren and sisters, and I have often asked myself the question, cannot I write something that would be of some small service? I will try, and may the Lord bless the effort.

One of the ills of this life which I deprecate is the unavoidable separation from those I love. Many parting scenes are fresh in my memory still. And when I look forward, "a little while," and think that separation shall be no more, were it not for the earnest of the Spirit I could not credit it; but now it is to me the "word of the Lord that liveth and abideth forever." How many times I have felt the truth of those words of the poet—

"Sweet indeed is the homeward track,
If we're but sure of a welcome back."

What a welcome awaits us just in the future. It is true,

"We're passing away,"

but it is nevertheless true,

"We're homeward bound."

Yes! and thank God, Jesus will see that we are carried safe through. For he is the "Author and finisher of our faith." Many of you, brethren and sisters, are strangers to me in the flesh, but through the blood of Jesus Christ we are made nigh; so that we are no longer "strangers and foreigners but fellow citizens of the household of God."

A little more than two years ago I was led into our Jordan in Yarmouth by Bro. R. R. York, and buried in baptism. It was not till after that time that I learned Jesus as I now know him, as my Life Giver. Ever since I have seen him as I now see him, I have longed for his appearing, that "where he is there I may be also." And to the brethren and sisters of Yarmouth, let me say, "Be of good cheer," there is no reason why you should be disheartened. "Look up for your redemption draweth nigh." I remember the many pleasant and social meetings that I have enjoyed with you, the many prayers, exhortations, and songs that have been offered. I remember how the ark has rested down on Institute Hall, the many

"Tears and sighs together blended."

I remember your labors of love. God is not unmindful of these. I exhort you by the love that ye bear to Jesus that ye "hold fast the form of sound words" "and have no fellowship with the unfruitful workers of darkness." Though I am absent in the body yet am I present in the Spirit. It is quite a cross here to profess to be an Adventist, but I glory in the name. I feel no disposition to shrink from the stigma. I glory in the name, because it expresses the coming of my Jesus; because it expresses that in which I repose all that I expect in the future. If our cross feels heavy, and we feel mortified sometimes in consequence of bearing it through the streets, let us be consoled by the truth of these words,

"If I'm faithful and true and my journey pursue
Till I stand on that heavenly shore,
I shall joyfully see what a blessing to me
Was the mortifying cross which I bore."

Liberty, Me.

From W. Lucas.

BRO. GRANT:—For the encouragement of the saints scattered abroad: My ignorance is the cause why I never have written for the encouragement of those who hold to the views that I do; that is, no inherent immortality, life only through Christ. It is now about sixteen years since a little book was handed to me, about as big as my hand, written by George Storrs. I had then just started into newness of life. It staggered me, but it sent me to the Bible. I was then and am yet very ignorant. I was born in poverty's vale and rocked in the cradle of ignorance, and I groan and am often cast down on this account; but the good Lord has kept me thus far. I have contended as well as I could for the truth in this place, almost single-handed. I have been refused membership in the M. E. Church, only because I could not endorse their views on the immortality of the soul. I have been called an infidel, an atheist, and Universalist, and I have often had an invitation to leave the store or place where I might be, and have often been told that I should find myself in hell. I have only heard one sermon on that subject by any that endorsed the views that I do, in all the sixteen years, yet I am not discouraged and would say to all the persecuted as I would to myself,—

"Courage! my soul, stretch every nerve,
And press with vigor on!"

Peekskill, N. Y.

Obituary Notice.

Died, in East Boston, Nov. 15th, Sister M. ARMSTRONG, after a sickness of several months.

Sister A. was baptized and united with the Advent church in this place within the year past. The hope of the gospel was to her a great support to the last. When she found that she could not recover, her mind was calm, and steadily fixed on her Savior, to whom alone she looked for life and immortality. She died in the "faith once delivered to the saints." That Christ died that she might have eternal life. That he became poor that she "through his poverty might become rich." That he will, according to his promise, raise her up at the last day. That he will change the vile body and make it like unto his glorious body. That when he who is our life shall appear, then will she appear with him in glory.

She has left a companion and several children to experience a great loss. May the blessed Savior who gave comfort to her be with and bless our brother and his family. The time will soon come when "there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain." "And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes." He who testifieth these things, saith, "surely I come quickly." Even so, come, Lord Jesus. J. S. WHITE.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

[Per steamship Palestine.]

The King of Sardinia arrived at Naples on the morning of the 7th with Garibaldi. They proceeded to the Cathedral and afterwards to the palace. There were great festivities in spite of the bad weather. The Paris correspondent of the London Post says that the dissolution of the Pope's army was inevitable. He will have left only a simple guard of 3000 men.

Victor Emmanuel has accepted the sovereignty of the Sicilies. The deed of annexation was drawn up by Garibaldi and Ministers, who had resigned.

The departure of Francis Second from Gaeta was imminent. It was reported that the commander of Gaeta was negotiating with Fauti for evacuation.

On the 7th Victor Emmanuel, accompanied by Garibaldi, entered Naples. On the following morning Garibaldi, accompanied by the Ministry, formally presented to the King the result of the plebicite. His Majesty received them in the throne room. Signor Conforti addressed the King thus: "Sire, the Neapolitan people assembled in their Electoral Committee, having proclaimed you King by an immense majority, nine million Italians are uniting themselves to the other provinces which your Majesty governs with so much wisdom, verifying your solemn promise that Italy should belong to the Italians."

The King replied in a few expressive words. The deed of annexation was drawn up, the Dictatorship ceased, and the ministry resigned. The enthusiasm of the people continued.

The last visit that Garibaldi paid, previous to leaving for his home on the Island of Capua, was to the English Admiral Monday.

Signor Montezeuolo was about to proceed to Sicily as Governor General.

A letter dated Gaeta, Nov. 2nd, says—"By the conduct of the French Admiral it was thought that a change of policy had occurred among the Great Powers altogether favorable to the Bourbon cause; as evidence of this, for four successive days, the French squadron prevented the Piedmontese fleet from landing troops on the banks of the Garigliano. The French guns were all shotted, the decks were cleared, every thing was ready for action, and, indeed there was a moment when the signal for firing was given on board the Betagne; and if the Sardinian vessels had continued to advance only three minutes, they would have received a broadside from the French fleet.

Admiral de Tinman had assured the King that he would protect the line of the Garigliano. But yesterday a French steamer came in with fresh instructions for the Admiral, and thereupon the French fleet left the mouth of the Garigliano, and at sunset yesterday evening returned to Gaeta. The moment he was relieved from the surveillance of the French fleet, Admiral Persano opened a fire against the Neapolitan city."

It is reported, in contradiction of a rumor of an opposite character, that in the Papal war budget for 1861, the expenses of the war department are stated at 4,182,000 dollars for an army of 34,000 men.

The Admiral commanding the Austrian fleet in the Adriatic has been put under arrest on the charge of malversation.

The Ausberg Gazette says that the total number of troops in Venetia is 135,000 men. The largest garrisons are at Venice and Mantua. The same Journal says the coasts are in a complete state of defence.

THREE DAYS LATER.

[Per steamship Arago.]

The Prince of Wales had not arrived when the Arago left.

Advices from China state that negotiations for a settlement were delayed by a question of money. The Allies were marching on Pekin, where Sangkee Linsin is stationed with a large force.

Lord Elgin would follow the troops September 9th.

The army reached Yang Tren Yeh on the 10th.

Two thousand troops were left to protect Tren Sien.

The rebels were inactive.

Trade was obstructed at Canton by the rebels.

It was rumored that the English Government had official dispatches to the effect that a treaty of peace had been concluded at Pekin. Nobody believes that the government would withhold such intelligence if it had been received.

Victor Emmanuel was to leave for Sicily on the 11th inst.

No fresh intelligence respecting the negotiations for the capitulation of Gaeta had been received.

It was stated that the Neapolitans entered the Papal States through the treachery of their General. General Guyon, however, was not satisfied with this explanation.

Garibaldi, in his proclamation tells his companions to be ready to follow him again, as a fresh conflict was likely to break out in Italy within a short time, when a million men would be wanted.

The siege works were actively continued before Gaeta. If the garrison did not capitulate, a bombardment would commence.

Francis Second rejected the proposal to evacuate, on the ground that he has still left 13,000 troops in Gaeta. He also relies on the strength of the fortress to maintain his position.

Victor Emmanuel and Garibaldi.

A letter from Naples, dated the 20th of October, gives the following account of the interview between Victor Emmanuel and Garibaldi:

"Garibaldi had taken up his quarters at a small inn about four miles and a half between Teano and Speranzano, on the 25th. He ordered his column to advance and take up position, and sent Count Trecchi to see the King. On the following morning Count Trecchi and Missori came to inform him that Cialdini was within an hour's march and the King not far behind.

Garibaldi left immediately with his staff, and three quarters of an hour afterward he came in sight of the head of the Piedmontese column. He put spurs to his horse. The Piedmontese advanced as follows: The 23d and 24th regiments of the Como Brigade; then a battery of rifled cannon. The columns presented arms to Garibaldi, and opened to allow him to pass through. Cialdini rushed forward, and Garibaldi, jumping off his horse, embraced him affectionately.

After exchanging a few words Garibaldi remounted to meet the King. Victor Emmanuel was not far behind, leading on his own division. Seeing the red shirts, the King took a telescope, and recognizing Garibaldi, put spurs to his horse and galloped toward him. Garibaldi did the same. When they were within ten paces of each other the officers of the King and of Garibaldi shouted, 'Long live Victor Emmanuel!' Garibaldi advanced, took off his hat, and, in a voice somewhat hoarse from emotion, said, 'King of Italy!' Victor Emmanuel put his hand to his kepi, then held it out to Garibaldi, and, equally moved, replied, 'Thank you!' They stood thus, hand in hand, nearly a minute, without uttering another word.

Garibaldi and the King, still holding each other's hand, followed the troops for about a quarter of an hour. Their suites had mingled together, and followed at a short distance behind them. Passing a group of officers, Garibaldi saluted them. Among them were Farini, Minister of War, in a foraging cap of a staff officer, and Gen. Fanti. The King and Garibaldi were conversing. After the King followed the 17th, 18th, 19th and 20th Regiments of the line, then sixty guns and four regiments of cavalry. His Majesty was at the head of 30,000 men.

Before reaching Teano, King Victor Emmanuel halted, and ordered a portion of his army to file off in presence of Garibaldi, that every one might observe the good feeling which prevailed between him and the chieftain. He then reviewed Bixio's brigade, which was posted a little beyond Calvi. He was received with the enthusiastic and unanimous shout of 'Long live the King of Italy!' Garibaldi has 7000 men, divided between different positions. The King remained at Teano, and Garibaldi returned to Calvi to give orders."

THE POPE.—A Paris letter says the resources of Pius IX are exhausted, the collection of Peter's pence has been a miserable failure, the revenue from the provinces which have placed themselves under the Government of Victor Emmanuel is suddenly cut off, the Pontifical army has no longer an existence, and the temporal rule of the Papacy is drawing to a close.

THE WORLD.—The North British Review, discoursing on the doom of the world, has the following remarks:

"What this change is to be we dare not conjecture, but we see in the heavens themselves some traces of destructive elements and some indications of their power; the fragments of broken planets, the descent of meteoric stones upon our globe, the whirling comets wielding their loose material at the solar surface, the volcanic eruption in our own satellite, the appearance of new stars and the disappearance of others, are all foreshadows of that impending convulsion to which this world was doomed. Thus placed on a planet which is to be burned up, and under heavens which are to pass away—thus residing, as it were, on the cemeteries and dwelling on the mausoleums of the former worlds, let us learn the lesson of humility and wisdom, if we have not already been taught in the school of revelation.

FRENCH.—The Council of War which was lately held at St. Cloud was attended by all the Marshals of France save one—Marshal Bosquet—who was detained by sickness, and the importance of the meeting may be inferred from the fact that they had a continuous session of four hours.

☞ In Florence a book has appeared with the singular title, "One Hundred and Seventy-one Rebellions in the Papal States from the year 896 to 1859."

☞ NOTICE! NOTICE! ☜

To brethren having my books I would say that I am very much in need of the amount of them. Most of them have been out two years, and as I am closing up the accounts, I wish you would attend to it immediately. If you have any on hand not sold, please return them to the Crisis office. Don't be heedless and subject me to further trouble; for I have settled with Bro. Hastings and paid him the cash for all that is out, and if you don't pay me, or send the book back, I lose it. Come, be honest; you will if you are a christian or a man. If you have forgot the account, I will soon refresh your memory by publishing your names, with the number of books you have had. HIRAM MUNGER.

ERRATUM.—In the notice of Bro. Flint's death, I was made to say that the funeral was on "Tuesday." It should have read Sunday. J. S. WHITE.

ESPECIAL BOOK NOTICE.

English Bibles.

We have just received a well assorted selection of genuine English Bibles, the prices of which we affix below. Having paid cash for them, we get them at the lowest prices, and therefore can afford to sell them for cash at the lowest retail rates. There is a heavy duty levied upon all printed matter coming from the English side of the line; but, all things taken into account, we offer them lower than sold elsewhere, as follows:—

Pearl, (reference betwixt the verses) roan binding, $1.25; postage 14 cts.
Pearl, do. do. colored calf, $1.50; postage 15 cts.
Pearl, do. do. morocco, $1.61; postage 15 cts.
Nonpareil, do. do. roan, $1.50; postage 21 cts.
Do. do. do. morocco, $2.25; postage 21 cts.
Minion, do. do. roan, $1.75; postage 26 cts.
Do. do. do. morocco, $2.50; postage 26 cts.

Please send in your orders, which shall be promptly attended to.

A Proposition.

To any one who will send us a new subscriber for one year, we will forward, post paid, a copy of our late discussion with Eld. W. W. Clayton, on the conscious state of the spirit after death, and the destruction of the wicked. And for a new subscriber for six months, we will send a copy of the pamphlets on "Soul" and "Spirit." With a little effort, a thousand names may be added to our list. Let every reader try to aid in scattering the light and truth. Now is the time to work.

For the Crisis.

The Lord's Supper.

Our divine Redeemer instituted this ordinance to be observed by his disciples "until he comes" to receive us to himself in his kingdom.—1 Cor. 11 : 23—26. His design was the continual "remembrance," in our too forgetful hearts, of his dying and living love for us.

Accordingly, we find that all "who gladly received the word" of the truth of the gospel, "were baptized," and continued "steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers."—Acts 2 : 42. How "steadfastly" they continued in the observance of these precious privileges for the honor of their Master and their own edification and holy rejoicing, we learn from Acts 20 : 7.—"And upon the first day of the week (not on the first Sunday of the month or quarter year) when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached to them," etc. It is not written that Paul administered to them whatsoever part he might have taken therein.* To an unsophisticated mind, the plain teaching here is, that it was the custom for the disciples of the Lord Jesus Christ at Troas, to come together every first day of the week to break bread and attend to the other ordinances of divine worship, as we read, Acts 2 : 42. This frequency of the observance of the Lord's supper is confirmed also in 1 Cor. 11 : 20.—"When ye come together therefore into one place, this is not to eat the Lord's Supper, for in eating every one taketh before other his own supper," etc.; i. e., their disorderly manner was not the right way of observing the ordinance. The passage implies, that the professed design and duty of their coming together, was to eat the Lord's Supper. That this was the practice of the christian churches in general, we learn from the fact that the inspired apostles taught the same things "in every church."—1 Cor. 4 : 17.

Now, beloved brethren, it is a fact worthy of our serious consideration, that although the disciples, when they assembled on the first day of the week, attended to christian ordinances in general, the breaking of bread is the only ordinance which is mentioned as the special object of their coming together. They "came together to break bread."—Acts 20 : 7; 1 Cor. 11 : 20. Can it then be right to omit three-fourths or more of the time, the very ordinance which was the chief design of the assembling of the saints according to our only rule of faith and practice? From 1 Cor. 11 : 33 we learn that the Supper was first observed after assembling. It was not put in the back-ground. Is not this divine institution the memorial of the Father's love, in the unspeakable gift of his only begotten Son to die for us, and of the love of the good Shepherd in laying down his life for the sheep? Is it not the memorial of the great fact, which constitutes the foundation of all our hope of deliverance from the second death, and of our immortality in the promised kingdom of God?

Have we not been corrupted from the simplicity which is in Jesus Christ, by allowing "lords over God's heritage" to make their presence and service essential to the disciples' enjoyment of the privileges their Lord has given them? I do not indeed question the sincerity of some, who, through the power of tradition, really suppose that none but an ordained elder has the right to baptize and to break the sacramental loaf. But I do affirm that they have no more scriptural authority for supposing it, than they have for supposing that none but an ordained elder has a right to pray or read the holy scriptures in the congregation.

Christian churches existed before officers were appointed, and had elders ordained in them.—Acts 14 : 23. In the absence of plain evidence of the contrary, we must believe that, previous to the appointment of elders, they "came together to break bread," as well as to pray and sing and to exhort one another. And why not, we may ask? Cannot a christian brother give thanks for the bread and the cup, or for the sacred blessings of which they are the emblems? Where there are elders in churches, it is proper for them to preside in the observance of christian ordinances; but they have no power to impart virtue to these emblems, as popish priests pretend.

As civil governors are appointed for the better enjoyment of our property, which is our antecedent right, so church officers are appointed for the better observance and enjoyment of the antecedent rights of disciples. Until officers are appointed, every assembly of "two or three" believers have a right, and are bound in duty to come together on the first day of the week to break bread, pray, sing, read the sacred Scriptures and exhort one another in the best manner they can, according to the ability God has given. In doing so, with holy motives to glorify their Father in heaven, they have the promise of the presence of their Redeemer, an ample remuneration for all the opposition of modern Sanballats and Tobiahs.

Jesus Christ has connected baptizing with preaching.—Matt. 28 : 19. Philip, who baptized the eunuch, was not an ordained elder. He was one of the seven appointed to attend to "the daily ministration" of temporal things.—Acts 6 : 1—5. Having preached Jesus unto the Ethiopian, who declared his belief that "Jesus Christ is the Son of God," he immersed him into his name.

Dear christian brethren, the honor of our blessed Master, and our own spiritual welfare demand our return to the simplicity of the New Testament of Jesus Christ. Let us, like the first christian churches, come together "on the first day of the week" "to break bread," and to exhort one another, lifting up holy hands in prayer and thanksgiving, singing, not by proxy, but with grace in our hearts, making melody to the Lord. For christians, who are able to exhort and admonish one another to shut up their house of worship, or to neglect the breaking of bread, because they have no ordained elder, is a lamentable renunciation of duty and privilege. As the light of the world for the salvation of the perishing, we are thus directed to hold forth the word of life, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless, looking for the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ, to whom be glory forever. Amen.

HENRY GREW.

* The breaking and eating of bread by Paul, Acts 20 : 11, was not the ordinance of the Lord's Supper; it was his individual act of eating for his sustenance, before his departure on second day morning. [illegible]

For the Crisis.

Notes by the Way.

After my trip to Machiasport, by request of Bro. Cottle I consented to visit Scituate harbor. This was a barren place, especially to think of getting the present truth to take root. The Methodists had the ground there, and felt quite safe and independent. The preacher felt above uniting to labor for a reformation, when requested by Bro. Cottle. All kinds of influences seemed in the way of the work of God,—political excitement, temperance meetings, torch-light processions, etc. A union protracted meeting had just commenced among the Congregationalists and Baptists, and their notice was sent to me on Sunday to read. The Unitarians had just got a fine, popular minister. These all having their attractions, left us a small chance, holding the unpopular views we did.

But we commenced under these unfavorable circumstances, with but a very few out. Bro. Cottle and wife were all that I know of who were in sympathy, and praying for God's work to break out. I got the blues, and concluded to leave unless the work started at the next meeting. Unexpectedly, Bro. Cottle's daughter astonished us by arising and telling how wicked she had been; she had hated God and requested prayers. This flew around the place like electricity. Others started; a number came out and confessed Christ very boldly; this turned the current, and encouraged us to hold meetings another week. Sunday, the 4th, two were baptized; God setting his seal to the ordinance by giving the Holy Ghost on coming out of the water, especially to Sr. Cottle. It was remarked by many they never saw such beauty on her before. This was noticed and mentioned by the unconverted. The devil was troubled and commenced slandering; but the truth took effect in many hearts. I providentially got a job to build a water wheel, that helped me to stay longer. I worked days and preached evenings, the interest increasing all the time.

I left the 13th to preach in East Boston. While among my good friends in that place I was nearly sick with a cold, which I took while working in a damp wheel pit. But the brethren helped me greatly with some twelve good warm exhortations, after preaching about twenty-eight minutes. Had a good attendance during the day and evening, although very rainy. Bro. White keeps his flock well fed with good wholesome food.

On returning, found the congregation had increased, but unwilling to yield to the Spirit of God's truth. The two young converts were very strong and happy, and warned their friends with good effect to escape the wrath to come. A few others took hold well; but this is a hard place, filled with sectarianism, bigotry and the devil. Bro. Cottle and family made me think of Lot in Sodom, except a more stable wife, who would not look back if the world was on fire.

On the third Sabbath, Bro. Clapp from Boston came down and assisted greatly in carrying on the meeting. I baptized one more on the Sabbath. This was another good time at the water, for God set his seal to this Bible ordinance. Sunday evening the hall was full, and the best attention was given. The truth took effect, and will show itself more fully hereafter.

I left Tuesday morning for Boston, thanking God for the work he had done in that hard place, and the kindness of the friends there. They helped me in a godly manner.

HIRAM MUNGER.

☞ A man struggling against christianity when under conviction, is like a fractious child struggling against a dear mother, when she reproves and punishes it, until, overcome by discipline, it rushes into her arms, and kisses her with a paroxysm of tears, and sobs even when it sleeps.

☞ Do not conclude the Lord is not with you because things go very contrary, and he does not appear for you; he was in the ship notwithstanding the storm, and the disciples thought of perishing.

The World's Crisis.

Rome and Napoleon; or,

AN EXPOSITION OF THE 17TH CHAP. OF REV.

No. 5.

"Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secrets unto his servants the prophets."—AMOS 3 : 7.

Having considered the woman and "the beast that carrieth her," we pass to notice "the ten horns" associated with the beast. The prophecy reads as follows:—

"And the ten horns which thou sawest are ten kings, which have received no kingdom as yet; but receive power as kings one hour with the beast. These have one mind, and shall give their power and strength unto the beast. These shall make war with the Lamb, and the Lamb shall overcome them; for he is Lord of lords and King of kings; and they that are with him are called, and chosen, and faithful. And he saith unto me, The waters which thou sawest, where the whore sitteth, are peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues. And the ten horns which thou sawest upon the beast, these shall hate the whore, and shall make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh, and burn her with fire. For God hath put in their hearts to fulfill his will, and to agree, and give their kingdom unto the beast, until the words of God shall be fulfilled."

In Wickliffe's translation, which is the oldest into English, the last part of verse 12 reads, "One hour after the beast." The Rheims translation is the same. One point should be noticed, which is, that these "ten kings" had "received no kingdom" at the time when John sees the woman supported by the sixth head; hence it appears that these ten must do their part of the work after the seventh head comes into power. Indeed, the context seems to clearly indicate that their whole work named in the prophecy, is to be accomplished after the healing of the wounded seventh head. This being true, these ten kings cannot be the ones on Daniel's fourth beast, three of which were plucked up to make room for the "little horn," or Papal power; for those in Daniel arose and commenced their work more than thirteen hundred years before the woman arrived in her history to where John saw her in this vision. It is also evident that these ten kings of Rev. 17 do not represent any of the great powers of Europe, because the latter have existed as kingdoms for centuries. These ten are to exist, as such, but a short space—"one hour." A part of their work is to make the harlot church "desolate," "and burn her with fire," hence their work is near the end of the christian dispensation. We think they synchronize with the ten toes of the metallic image in the second chapter of Daniel, and are the ones to be in existence when the "stone" smites the image and breaks it "to pieces." This long-looked-for event is evidently just at hand.

That part of the image of Daniel symbolized by the legs, feet, and toes, is Roman; hence we conclude that the last part of the Roman empire will be occupied by the toes. But the Roman Empire for some time has been confined to Italy; consequently, there is the place to look for the toes of the metalic image and the "ten horns," or "ten kings," that were to hate "the mother of harlots," who is "drunken with the blood of the saints."

Let us look at the geographical and political condition of Italy, and see if we find the ten toes, or "ten kings," mentioned in the prophet, which should "receive power as kings one hour with the beast." The prophetic language should be closely observed. They were to "receive power AS [or like] kings" for a short space. These are to unite and "give their power and strength unto the beast," or aid him in his purposes. The beast here mentioned must be the last husband of the woman, when its eighth head is ruling.

At this point, we will quote from an exposition of this prophecy by J. F. Bird, a defender of the Roman Catholic religion. He says:—"By the late Italian war—the war of 1859—the same two Catholic powers [France and Austria] that altered, broke up, or joined the toes, have now repaired and arranged them again. Now, after the war in Italy, the Catholics have got all their kingdoms—all the toes—ready, already to be given up. The Italian war of 1859 was, as it were, for this very purpose, and it ceased suddenly when this object was accomplished. The Italian war raised up an additional kingdom—the kingdom of Venetia..... So that viewing the late Italian war of 1859 in a Scriptural point of view, the object of it was to get the toes of the statue—.... ten Catholic kingdoms—ready for the beast."

The writer considers Mohammedanism the beast, and says he "will come to his end" in 1868, when the Roman Catholic church will be delivered by the second coming of Christ.

We now inquire for the ten divisions of Italy, which are to "receive power as kings one hour with the beast." At the close of the war of 1859 they were as follows:—

1. The kingdom of Sardinia.
2. The kingdom of Lombardy.
3. The kingdom of Venetia.
4. The kingdom of Illyria.
5. The duchy of Parma.
6. The duchy of Modena.
7. The grand duchy of Tuscany.
8. The republic of San Marino.
9. The States of the Church.
10. The kingdom of Naples, including Sicily.

What are these "toes" or kings to do? They are to sympathize with the beast, and give him "their power and strength." They are to "have one mind" in this matter. It is well known that they assisted Napoleon in driving out the Austrians in 1859, and he is undoubtedly co-operating with them in freeing Italy from the Papal yoke, while he pretends to defend him by his troops at Rome. It is evident that the French Emperor is conniving at the movements of Garibaldi in suppressing the Papacy.

When speaking further of the work of these ten horns, the prophet says:—"These shall hate the whore, and shall make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh, and burn her with fire. For God hath put in their hearts to fulfill his will, and to agree and give their kingdom unto the beast, until the words of God shall be fulfilled." It should be observed that these ten horns together constitute one kingdom, i. e., the Roman. At the time John saw this vision, before this kingdom was under the control of these ten kings, he says, they "have received no kingdom as yet." It will be noticed that the word kingdom is in the singular number. But after they receive it, or when it comes under their control, they are "to agree and give their kingdom unto the beast." All the toes make up "the kingdom," which is to unite with the beast under the rule of its eighth head, and assist in making the harlot "desolate and naked."

The question now arises, is this work of the ten horns past, present, or future? Their hatred has certainly commenced; it is intense, and we need not stop to adduce proof. It is known to the whole civilized world, and the hatred is continually increasing. We next inquire, has this hatred begun to show itself in outward acts, as expressed by the words, "make her desolate and naked"? When a harlot is made "desolate and naked," her lovers and supporters become her haters, she is neglected, becomes poor, and her filthiness is exposed only to be an object of greater contempt, with whom none but the most degraded will associate. Is this now the condition of the church on "the seven hills?" So it appears. The kings who once sustained, now hate her; and seem ready to "eat her flesh, and burn her with fire." If the flesh of an individual be eaten, it would lessen their size and strength. This is just the work which the ten kings are doing. They have already taken off large pieces. In the Pope's late Allocution he speaks of being in "great anguish" on account of being so "reduced" in territory and strength, by the action of these kings, that he is "unable, without great difficulty, to look after the interests of the church." These "ten horns" have one more great work to accomplish, which is to "burn her with fire." Her terrible end is evidently at hand.

In the eighteenth chapter her closing history is continued, from which we learn that immediately following her destruction, comes "the marriage supper of the Lamb," and the eternal triumph of the saints, which must be preceded by the resurrection of the dead.

It is truly sublime to be living so near such great events. That they are about to transpire is very evident. "The last days" have really come with their terrible accompaniments, which will spread a frightful alarm among "the enemies of the cross of Christ;" but causing "the saints of the Most High" to "rejoice," because "He hath judged the great whore, which did corrupt the earth with her fornication, and hath avenged the blood of his servants at her hand."

Dear reader, are you ready to welcome the Son of Man? Are you among his loyal subjects? Can you say, as did John, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus?"

Where is the Wrong?

In the Herald of Progress, a Spiritualist paper published in New York, and edited by Andrew Jackson Davis, we find the following question: "If there is any wrong in the universe, (moral wrong I mean) who is the author of it?"

The Editor answers:—"Not only of course, but by necessity, nature and its central power, Deity, must be its author."

This being true, it follows as a consequence, that there is no sin in the world; otherwise, our Creator is the sinner; and says John, "He that committeth sin is of the Devil." If the answer is correct, then God is a robber, a thief, a liar, a drunkard, an adulterer, a murderer, etc., and man is innocent. What will people believe next? Truly "this is an age of progress!" ASTONISHING PROGRESS!!

A Bold Assertion.

At a recent meeting in Boston, La Roy Sunderland, formerly a prominent Methodist preacher, since a Spiritualist, when referring to the resurrection of the dead, said:—"If you want to believe in dead carcasses being raised, you may feed your mind on them. I have been born again, redeemed; and have converted more than any other priest."

Bro. D. T. Taylor.

As many of our readers have enjoyed the faithful labors of Bro. Taylor in time past, and feel a deep anxiety in his temporal as well as spiritual welfare, we venture to give his friends a few of his remarks, copied from the Laws of Life, made at the anniversary meeting of the opening of "Our Home," at Dansville, Livingston Co., N. Y. This anniversary of Oct. 1st was the second since the Water Cure, under Dr. J. C. Jackson, was opened; since which time, great success has attended the efforts of the Dr. and his associates. Bro. Taylor is now taking treatment at this health institution, with strong hopes of recovering from a very difficult chronic disease. The following toast was offered for his benefit on the occasion:—

ELD. D. T. TAYLOR:—"May he regain his health; not by patches, but may he be made every whit whole, like a new garment, and so may be able to preach practical discourses that will fit nicely, according to the custom of all good tailors."

Bro. Taylor was called for and said:—"I am glad to be here, glad I came here to tarry instead of going to other Water Cures which I visited. I took up my line of march for this hill-side, and have seen no cause to regret it. In a modified sense of the term, I am satisfied;—satisfied with the place, the people, my doctors, my hard bed, my saltless food, my blessed mush;—satisfied without drugs, satisfied with baths, and the pure, limped water, flowing down from the 'All-healing Spring.' I am glad this Cure was founded, and glad these men founded it. They are just the men to do this deed. I am thankful my lot is thus pleasantly cast with them. I see sick, lonely, and miserable hours; doubtful and doubting hours;—who don't? Then I think of other homes, and my heart goes back to the dear ones afar—mother, sister, brother and friend, and with you I wish myself among them. To-day I realize unto them the sweet words of Moore—

'Some kind voice had whispered I wish he were here.'

But there is 'no cloud so dark but hath a silver lining in it.'"

We would say to Bro. Taylor that we saw his mother and brother, when at Champlain. They were both at our meeting the first Sabbath; but the traveling was so bad the next Lord's day, that his brother thought not best to drive his horse through the mud, but came and returned on foot, upon the R. R. from Rouse's Point,—a distance of four miles. They are well, and striving to be ready for the coming of the Son of man.

"The Crisis of the Union."

The above heading, taken from a leading New York Daily, seems appropriate for these times. That our United States are approaching a "crisis" is certain; and one too of no small magnitude. This fact will be apparent after reading the following extracts from different correspondents in the Southern States. A correspondent from Charlestown, South Carolina, of the 12th inst., when speaking of a gathering on that evening at Institute Hall, says:—"When the speaker declared, 'This Union is dissolved,' the enthusiasm of the people was beyond bounds. They rose to their feet, threw up their hats, and cheered till hoarse." He remarks, "There is no longer any possible doubt that the State will secede.... The struggle is over, and we are merely perfecting the secession arrangements." Preparations are being made for arming the State for any emergency. The United States officers of S. C. are resigning their official stations, and a declaration of independence is already drawn up to be presented to the people for acceptance. They have appointed Dec. 17th for holding a State convention, when they purpose to come to a full decision as to their future course of action. All classes are said to be aroused, even "old men and young women and children."

A Richmond (Va.) correspondent says: "The secession movement is going forward with a rush; the popular mind of the South is fired up to the focus of revolution, and the preliminaries are being rapidly arranged and will soon be perfected." "In any event," he says, "secession is looked upon as certain to occur at some period within Mr. Buchanan's term."

A correspondent from Mobile, Ala., Nov. 12th, says:—"The citizens here appear almost unanimously in favor of secession. Several corps of Minute men are organizing."

A Washington correspondent of Nov. 12th, says:—"All the intelligence received from the South to-day indicates hasty and precipitate action on the part of five states—South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi and Florida." These have prepared a series of instructions to be sent to their agent at Paris, who is to lay them before the Emperor Napoleon, for the purpose of inducing him to acknowledge their independence. They wish their agent to say to him, that they "with the whole civilized world, look to him as the defender of oppressed nationalities."

The following manifesto is proposed:—

"We, the representatives of the people of South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Florida and Mississippi, do, in their name and by their authority, agree and declare that, for the reasons hereunto annexed, we deliberately and solemnly announce to the United States and to the civilized world that we no longer owe any allegiance to the United States, but that we are, and of right ought to be, a free and independent Power. And feeling confident that we can justify our action in the eyes of the world, and appealing to the God of nations and of battles as witness to the righteousness of our cause, we do hereby, in the name and by the authority of the people, form and establish ourselves into separate and independent Southern confederacy, to be maintained, if need be, by force of arms, and claiming to be recognized, so soon as our government shall be organized, as a free and sovereign nation, prepared to enter into treaties with foreign powers, to lay impost duties and taxes, to create an army and navy, to coin money, emit bills of credit, and otherwise to perform all acts incident to national sovereignty."

A Strange Resolution.

At the "Speaker's Convention" of Spiritualists, held at Quincy, Mass., Oct. 30, 31st, and Nov. 1st, 1860, the following resolution was offered:—

"Resolved, That man is not totally depraved, as taught by some, neither is he part good and part bad, having an antagonism within himself. But he is wholly and absolutely good, and morally pure, and consequently needs no regeneration, but only development in true wisdom."

Says John in his first letter, when speaking of Christ; "If we say that we have not sinned, we make him a liar, and his word is not in us." Then it follows, if the foregoing resolution is true, that Christ is "a liar."

ANOTHER RESOLUTION. At the United States Infidel Convention, held in New York, on Sunday, Oct. 7th, 1860, the following resolution was presented:—

"Resolved, That infidelity is thus in very truth the proclamation of the most blessed and glorious, the only true gospel ever sounded in human ears—the gospel of human happiness—it is indeed a voice crying to the thousand million weepers in this vale of tears, 'Behold, I bring you glad tidings of great joy, which shall be unto all people; peace on earth, good will to men'—an Oriental dream which the Bible is not, but infidelity is!"

Infidelity is rapidly spreading in all parts of the world, and is presenting a bold front to the truth and its supporters. Let every christian man stand firm, trusting in Him whose "word is truth." The conflict between truth and error, right and wrong, light and darkness, is now an earnest one. Be "valiant for the TRUTH."

For the Crisis.

Argumentum ad Hominem.

A college professor had invented, or devised, a bell-shaped millstone for grinding corn, but which served only as a butt of ridicule for the students. A wag among them called it the Argumentum ad Homminy, and this was the standing joke. And the story may help those readers who are not versed in Latin to remember the wording of the original phrase.

And now for the meaning of it. The English is: The argument to the man himself. When you show that an argument is inconsistent with the opinions of him who offers it, or that it condemns his conduct, or affords matter for his serious consideration, then you employ the argumentum ad hominem. You appeal to what the man himself believes, or to his conscience, or to his self-love. His reasoning may be good enough; but he has no right to condemn you by it until he first confesses himself condemned. Before he can triumph, he must mend his thoughts or his ways.

That our Savior and the inspired writers frequently used this argument is quite certain. And I now write specially to commend Bro. White's tract on the Rich Man and Lazarus, for its reasoning in this direction. Bro. W. regards this parable as describing the real opinions of the Pharisees, respecting the state of the dead. The rich man, they thought, was in actual torment, and Lazarus in blissful enjoyment; and they might remain so, for aught the parable shows, to all eternity. Well, says Christ, if you believe so, this rich man is the very picture of yourselves. Hold the opinion, if you will; but beware of its application; for a Nathan might say again: "Thou art the man." That Christ did not endorse the opinion as correct abundantly appears from his teachings on all other occasions.

Such is the argument in this tract; and for this, and the skill with which it is conducted, it effectually silences the orthodox reasoning from the passage, and is worth its small price several times over.

I have, however, a remark to make respecting the "Discourse concerning Hades" which Bro. W. takes as if written by Josephus, and as giving the opinions of the Pharisees. "For the sake of the argument" we may safely concede this, as Bro. W. well shows. But I have questioned this in my book on Debt and Grace; and I wish to show that this concession for argument's sake need not be made. Whatever the Pharisees believed, their opinions can not be made out from this fragment published with Whiston's Josephus. Whiston makes a long argument to show that Josephus wrote the "Discourse"; but in this view he stands almost, if not altogether alone among modern scholars. And, since people are so apt to regard Josephus as next to the Bible, and to regard the opinions of the Pharisees as sound orthodox doctrine, it is much to be regretted that this fragment should appear as a part of Josephus' works. No Greek edition of his works contains it. And when Josephus can be sold to the people by million copies, for what he is, and for what he is worth (which is also a question), it will be a great reform effected.

I can not here give all the proofs that the "Discourse concerning Hades" was never written by Josephus, but hope to do so at another time. Suffice it to say, it constantly quotes the New Testament, which the Jew Josephus would never have dreamed of doing. Whiston's argument rests partly on this absurd foundation, and partly on the opinion of "some wiseacre of the Byzantine age," as Bunsen calls him, who ascribed the fragment to Josephus. The book from which it is taken was probably written by Hyppolytus, bishop of the Harbor of Rome, about A. D. 225. And he, says Bunsen, "did not give his description of Hades as a revelation, but as a christian picture." That is, as a fancy sketch, answering to Plato's myth in his Gorgias. (Hippolytus and his Age, I. 401, 402.)

For the Crisis.

A Word to a Wanderer.

A letter which came to me this evening reads as follows:—

Nov. 8th, 1860.

MY DEAR FRIEND:—When I read your earnest appeals to the church of Christ from time to time, to awake from their stupor and be up and doing while the day lasts, I feel that there is need of many such appeals to arouse the slumbering church. Alas! how many are sleeping when they should be fighting the Lord's battles. I feel that it has been so with me, but I am determined by the grace of God to awake and arise, gird myself for the battle, and fight the good fight of faith, that I may lay hold of eternal life through the merits of my Savior.

Ah! little did I think, ten years ago, when your father baptized me, that I should live so far from God; but, alas! I stumbled where I fear many have; instead of taking up my cross and bearing the burden, I endeavored to go around it, and in so doing wandered into many forbidden paths, and slumbered on the enemy's ground; and now when I would return unto my Father's fold, I find the way dark and slippery, beset by many foes who would fain prevent me from reaching my Father's house.

In vain I seek for the peace and joy which I once had in believing. I do not feel that full assurance that I am a child of God, which I wish to, and my heart is not filled with the love of God as I wish it might be. Will you not pray for me, dear friend, that the Lord may forgive all past transgressions, and dispel the darkness and clouds that are hanging over my mind, and that the light of his reconciled countenance may beam in upon my soul, that I may be enabled to glorify him while here below, and meet with his acceptance when he shall come to judge the quick and dead?

* * * * Your unworthy friend, C.

MY DEAR SISTER:—Though personally unacquainted with you, or at least unable to recall your name and countenance, I will yet venture to address you a few lines in this public manner, hoping that God may enable me to benefit others beside yourself.

Your case is by no means an extraordinary one. You were converted ten years ago and baptized by my father, whose brown hairs have been pillowed in the dust for nearly seven years. You then was among those who were gathered during the latter part of his service. Perhaps his mind was on you with others, when he battled with disease and strove to live, with this one desire before him, that he might feed the lambs a little longer. I think when he was nearly through his work he said to a friend if he could only have all his children, those who had been added to the Lord under his labors, before him once more, and could preach them all one more sermon, he would die contented. But this could not be. The seed which his hand had sown broad-cast, was too widely scattered ever to be gathered together again until the end—the great harvest day.

"Then when the glorious end,
The day of God shall come,
The angel-reapers shall descend,
And heaven sing Harvest home."

My sister, in that day will you not meet that man of God in the eternal kingdom? I cannot speak to you as he would, were he here, and yet how gladly would I help to do that work which he left unfinished. O if I could but labor with the might that he at times possessed,—but I am but a child,—he was a father in Israel.

Let me still venture to say to you a word of encouragement. You have no doubt learned ere this, that the service of God must be a labor of love. Do you then realize how much the Lord loves YOU? Do not mistake me? I am not speaking of YOUR love to God, that I know has been changeful, transient and fickle, but of HIS love to YOU—the deep, the vast, the unsearchable love of Christ.

Perhaps you have been looking to yourself, to your frames of mind, your feelings and your fancies for abiding comfort. You did not thus learn Christ of my father, I think. Well do I remember his exhorting trembling souls to plant themselves upon the promises of God. "Whosoever cometh unto me will I in no wise cast out." "Stand there," said he, "feel good or feel bad, feel accepted or rejected, stand and believe what God has spoken."

Now, my sister, as you return from your wanderings, drawn by the grace of Christ, will you not make a stand here? Do not look at what you are, but at what Christ is. He is your help. It is not so much matter how severe your illness, how deadly your malady is—but are you touching the hem of the Savior's garment? Here is the cure. Do not think it is worth a thought whether you are a great sinner or a small one; one sin loved and harbored will destroy you,—a thousand can do no more—the grand point is to come to Christ who has power on earth to forgive sin and whose blood cleanseth from all sin. I think if you will learn to have very mean and poor thoughts of yourself, even as the chief of sinners, and very great and glorious thoughts of Christ, as able to save unto the uttermost, the outer-most-all that come unto God by him, it will aid you in the new life which is before you now. And if the great thought of God's love to you fills your heart, your love to him will come as a matter of course, just as streams are full when showers from above descend. Do not doubt then but it will be easy to obey his call, for where love is, there is no labor; and love makes labor light.

You are bought with a price. You are baptized into Christ's death. One died for all,—then all were dead. He redeems us. We should not live to ourselves, but to Christ who died and rose again. We love him because he first loved us, and so our love sprung from his and is great only as we see the greatness of his own tender affection.

If you would live a true christian life you must look to Christ. Not to doctrines, but to Christ. Not to theories, but to Christ. Not to names, but to Christ. Not to human leaders, but to Christ. Not to Calvary, but to Christ. Not to the kingdom, but Christ himself,—a living, personal great High Priest, who now, in this very hour, liveth to make intercession for you. He is a reality, not a myth—not a mere idea,—no, a kind, tender, loving Lord—who though he be "God over all, blessed forevermore," is yet "the man Christ Jesus," "touched with the feeling of our infirmities," and "able to succor them that are tempted," faithfully watching us, nor suffering us to be tempted "above what we are able to bear," but with the temptation providing a way of escape that we "may be able to bear it."

Go to him, then, daily. Tell him all your wants, your woes, your sorrows and your tears. Pour out your heart before him and he will surely bless you. Then go into his work. Do not be too timid or too dainty about it. Grasp it quickly as you would a nettle; it won't prick half as bad as if you handle it very carefully. Deny yourself, take up the cross and love it because Jesus bore it, and bore it for you. Then live for him continually.

You need not make resolutions nor promises—Peter tried that and succeeded about as all others have since. Look to Christ and say, "Thou knowest that I love thee," and then he will tell you, "Feed my sheep." Go to his work—work out the salvation that God works within. Obey the word of God. Be led by the Spirit of God, and in doing this you shall be blest here and crowned in the glory of the world to come.

In hope of that day I remain, with prayers in your behalf, your brother in Christ. H. L. Hastings.

Human Destiny.

A CRITIQUE ON UNIVERSALISM.

Under this title I have just published my argument in the discussion with Mr. Cobb, as a separate volume. Many of the readers of the Crisis have read it, and some of them have the volume of the entire discussion. But I have reason to think the argument now publishing will be a desirable book. Some of my orthodox friends think very highly of it. Many Advent people may find it convenient in their intercourse with Universalists. And the Universalist Quarterly speaks of Mr. H.'s argument as follows:—

"We can not say that we find it agreeable to see him, as we now do, in the position of an opponent. It is, however, a real mitigation of our regret, that we find in him still the gentleman, scholar, and christian. Perhaps we are the better pleased that his articles, though nominally controversial, are substantially disquisitions. Further, it is a positive satisfaction to read an argument against Universalism that has something of freshness and power. The thread-bare objections to our doctrine, coming from the old-school theologians, we have examined till we grow languid at the taste. Mr. Hudson comes to the question with new arguments, new interpretations of Scripture, and with an array of learning that would be pedantic if it were not so genuine."

This argument makes a book of 136 pages. Price, in paper, 25 cts. In cloth, 44 cts. It is bound with the three following tracts, forming a volume of 216 pages, and sold at 60 cts. "The Rights of Wrong"; "The Rich Man and Lazarus"; and "Reviewers Reviewed." This is a new tract of 36 pages, replying to twelve or fourteen Reviews and other orthodox works; particularly to the Bibliotheca Sacra, the Methodist Quarterly, the Theological and Literary Journal, the Presbyterian Quarterly; briefly to Prof. Hovey; to Mr. Landis on Immortality, Mr. Warren's "Sadducecism," and Dr. Thompson's "Love and Penalty." Price, in paper, 10 cts. C. F. H.

Sabbath School Books.

Why not have appropriate Sabbath school books for our children? We have nothing now. I supposed the Publishing Association were going to do something, and begin soon. There are men among us that can and will get up the thing we want. Children will read; and remember, our children ought to be taught better than to believe in immortal-soulism, as is taught in all other Sabbath school books. I know of a number of schools that are using the Methodist books for the want of others. Let us strike at the root of Spiritualism in the minds of our children; the sooner the better. Hiram Munger.

Correspondence.

From Dr. J. W. Mitchell.

To the Brethren and Sisters scattered abroad and the church at Yarmouth in particular: Situated as I am in a region where there are very few indeed who hold the like "precious faith" with myself, I sometimes long to break away, and hear the glad tidings of a coming Savior proclaimed with all the sincerity and earnestness which I have seen manifested in times past. But I have the blessed Bible and the Crisis to read (and they go well together), so that I am not alone. O! how my heart has been cheered from week to week, in reading the communications from my brethren and sisters, and I have often asked myself the question, cannot I write something that would be of some small service? I will try, and may the Lord bless the effort.

One of the ills of this life which I deprecate is the unavoidable separation from those I love. Many parting scenes are fresh in my memory still. And when I look forward, "a little while," and think that separation shall be no more, were it not for the earnest of the Spirit I could not credit it; but now it is to me the "word of the Lord that liveth and abideth forever." How many times I have felt the truth of those words of the poet—

"Sweet indeed is the homeward track,
If we're but sure of a welcome back."

What a welcome awaits us just in the future. It is true,

"We're passing away,"

but it is nevertheless true,

"We're homeward bound."

Yes! and thank God, Jesus will see that we are carried safe through. For he is the "Author and finisher of our faith." Many of you, brethren and sisters, are strangers to me in the flesh, but through the blood of Jesus Christ we are made nigh; so that we are no longer "strangers and foreigners but fellow citizens of the household of God."

A little more than two years ago I was led into our Jordan in Yarmouth by Bro. R. R. York, and buried in baptism. It was not till after that time that I learned Jesus as I now know him, as my Life Giver. Ever since I have seen him as I now see him, I have longed for his appearing, that "where he is there I may be also." And to the brethren and sisters of Yarmouth, let me say, "Be of good cheer," there is no reason why you should be disheartened. "Look up for your redemption draweth nigh." I remember the many pleasant and social meetings that I have enjoyed with you, the many prayers, exhortations, and songs that have been offered. I remember how the ark has rested down on Institute Hall, the many

I remember your labors of love. God is not unmindful of these. I exhort you by the love that ye bear to Jesus that ye "hold fast the form of sound words" "and have no fellowship with the unfruitful workers of darkness." Though I am absent in the body yet am I present in the Spirit. It is quite a cross here to profess to be an Adventist, but I glory in the name. I feel no disposition to shrink from the stigma. I glory in the name, because it expresses the coming of my Jesus; because it expresses that in which I repose all that I expect in the future. If our cross feels heavy, and we feel mortified sometimes in consequence of bearing it through the streets, let us be consoled by the truth of these words,

"If I'm faithful and true and my journey pursue
Till I stand on that heavenly shore,
I shall joyfully see what a blessing to me
Was the mortifying cross which I bore."

Liberty, Me.

From W. Lucas.

Bro. Grant:—For the encouragement of the saints scattered abroad: My ignorance is the cause why I never have written for the encouragement of those who hold to the views that I do; that is, no inherent immortality, life only through Christ. It is now about sixteen years since a little book was handed to me, about as big as my hand, written by George Storrs. I had then just started into newness of life. It staggered me, but it sent me to the Bible. I was then and am yet very ignorant. I was born in poverty's vale and rocked in the cradle of ignorance, and I groan and am often cast down on this account; but the good Lord has kept me thus far. I have contended as well as I could for the truth in this place, almost single-handed. I have been refused membership in the M. E. Church, only because I could not endorse their views on the immortality of the soul. I have been called an infidel, an atheist, and Universalist, and I have often had an invitation to leave the store or place where I might be, and have often been told that I should find myself in hell. I have only heard one sermon on that subject by any that endorsed the views that I do, in all the sixteen years, yet I am not discouraged and would say to all the persecuted as I would to myself,—

"Courage! my soul, stretch every nerve,
And press with vigor on!"

Obituary Notice.

Died, in East Boston, Nov. 15th, Sister M. Armstrong, after a sickness of several months.

Sister A. was baptized and united with the Advent church in this place within the year past. The hope of the gospel was to her a great support to the last. When she found that she could not recover, her mind was calm, and steadily fixed on her Savior, to whom alone she looked for life and immortality. She died in the "faith once delivered to the saints." That Christ died that she might have eternal life. That he became poor that she "through his poverty might become rich." That he will, according to his promise, raise her up at the last day. That he will change the vile body and make it like unto his glorious body. That when he who is our life shall appear, then will she appear with him in glory.

She has left a companion and several children to experience a great loss. May the blessed Savior who gave comfort to her be with and bless our brother and his family. The time will soon come when "there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain." "And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes." He who testifieth these things, saith, "surely I come quickly." Even so, come, Lord Jesus. J. S. White.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

[Per steamship Palestine.]

The King of Sardinia arrived at Naples on the morning of the 7th with Garibaldi. They proceeded to the Cathedral and afterwards to the palace. There were great festivities in spite of the bad weather. The Paris correspondent of the London Post says that the dissolution of the Pope's army was inevitable. He will have left only a simple guard of 3000 men.

Victor Emmanuel has accepted the sovereignty of the Sicilies. The deed of annexation was drawn up by Garibaldi and Ministers, who had resigned.

The departure of Francis Second from Gaeta was imminent. It was reported that the commander of Gaeta was negotiating with Fauti for evacuation.

On the 7th Victor Emmanuel, accompanied by Garibaldi, entered Naples. On the following morning Garibaldi, accompanied by the Ministry, formally presented to the King the result of the plebiscite. His Majesty received them in the throne room. Signor Conforti addressed the King thus: "Sire, the Neapolitan people assembled in their Electoral Committee, having proclaimed you King by an immense majority, nine million Italians are uniting themselves to the other provinces which your Majesty governs with so much wisdom, verifying your solemn promise that Italy should belong to the Italians."

The King replied in a few expressive words. The deed of annexation was drawn up, the Dictatorship ceased, and the ministry resigned. The enthusiasm of the people continued.

The last visit that Garibaldi paid, previous to leaving for his home on the Island of Capua, was to the English Admiral Munday.

Signor Montezeuolo was about to proceed to Sicily as Governor General.

A letter dated Gaeta, Nov. 2nd, says—"By the conduct of the French Admiral it was thought that a change of policy had occurred among the Great Powers altogether favorable to the Bourbon cause; as evidence of this, for four successive days, the French squadron prevented the Piedmontese fleet from landing troops on the banks of the Garigliano. The French guns were all shotted, the decks were cleared, every thing was ready for action, and, indeed there was a moment when the signal for firing was given on board the Betagne; and if the Sardinian vessels had continued to advance only three minutes, they would have received a broadside from the French fleet.

Admiral de Tinman had assured the King that he would protect the line of the Garigliano. But yesterday a French steamer came in with fresh instructions for the Admiral, and thereupon the French fleet left the mouth of the Garigliano, and at sunset yesterday evening returned to Gaeta. The moment he was relieved from the surveillance of the French fleet, Admiral Persano opened a fire against the Neapolitan city."

It is reported, in contradiction of a rumor of an opposite character, that in the Papal war budget for 1861, the expenses of the war department are stated at 4,182,000 dollars for an army of 34,000 men.

The Admiral commanding the Austrian fleet in the Adriatic has been put under arrest on the charge of malversation.

The Ausberg Gazette says that the total number of troops in Venetia is 135,000 men. The largest garrisons are at Venice and Mantua. The same Journal says the coasts are in a complete state of defence.

THREE DAYS LATER.

[Per steamship Arago.]

The Prince of Wales had not arrived when the Arago left.

Advices from China state that negotiations for a settlement were delayed by a question of money. The Allies were marching on Pekin, where Sangkee Linsin is stationed with a large force.

Lord Elgin would follow the troops September 9th.

The army reached Yang Tren Yeh on the 10th.

Two thousand troops were left to protect Tren Sien.

The rebels were inactive.

Trade was obstructed at Canton by the rebels.

It was rumored that the English Government had official dispatches to the effect that a treaty of peace had been concluded at Pekin. Nobody believes that the government would withhold such intelligence if it had been received.

Victor Emmanuel was to leave for Sicily on the 11th inst.

No fresh intelligence respecting the negotiations for the capitulation of Gaeta had been received.

It was stated that the Neapolitans entered the Papal States through the treachery of their General. General Guyon, however, was not satisfied with this explanation.

Garibaldi, in his proclamation tells his companions to be ready to follow him again, as a fresh conflict was likely to break out in Italy within a short time, when a million men would be wanted.

The siege works were actively continued before Gaeta. If the garrison did not capitulate, a bombardment would commence.

Francis Second rejected the proposal to evacuate, on the ground that he has still left 13,000 troops in Gaeta. He also relies on the strength of the fortress to maintain his position.

Victor Emmanuel and Garibaldi.

A letter from Naples, dated the 20th of October, gives the following account of the interview between Victor Emmanuel and Garibaldi:

"Garibaldi had taken up his quarters at a small inn about four miles and a half between Teano and Speranzano, on the 25th. He ordered his column to advance and take up position, and sent Count Trecchi to see the King. On the following morning Count Trecchi and Missori came to inform him that Cialdini was within an hour's march and the King not far behind.

Garibaldi left immediately with his staff, and three quarters of an hour afterward he came in sight of the head of the Piedmontese column. He put spurs to his horse. The Piedmontese advanced as follows: The 23d and 24th regiments of the Como Brigade; then a battery of rifled cannon. The columns presented arms to Garibaldi, and opened to allow him to pass through. Cialdini rushed forward, and Garibaldi, jumping off his horse, embraced him affectionately.

After exchanging a few words Garibaldi remounted to meet the King. Victor Emmanuel was not far behind, leading on his own division. Seeing the red shirts, the King took a telescope, and recognizing Garibaldi, put spurs to his horse and galloped toward him. Garibaldi did the same. When they were within ten paces of each other the officers of the King and of Garibaldi shouted, 'Long live Victor Emmanuel!' Garibaldi advanced, took off his hat, and, in a voice somewhat hoarse from emotion, said, 'King of Italy!' Victor Emmanuel put his hand to his kepi, then held it out to Garibaldi, and, equally moved, replied, 'Thank you!' They stood thus, hand in hand, nearly a minute, without uttering another word.

Garibaldi and the King, still holding each other's hand, followed the troops for about a quarter of an hour. Their suites had mingled together, and followed at a short distance behind them. Passing a group of officers, Garibaldi saluted them. Among them were Farini, Minister of War, in a foraging cap of a staff officer, and Gen. Fanti. The King and Garibaldi were conversing. After the King followed the 17th, 18th, 19th and 20th Regiments of the line, then sixty guns and four regiments of cavalry. His Majesty was at the head of 30,000 men.

Before reaching Teano, King Victor Emmanuel halted, and ordered a portion of his army to file off in presence of Garibaldi, that every one might observe the good feeling which prevailed between him and the chieftain. He then reviewed Bixio's brigade, which was posted a little beyond Calvi. He was received with the enthusiastic and unanimous shout of 'Long live the King of Italy!' Garibaldi has 7000 men, divided between different positions. The King remained at Teano, and Garibaldi returned to Calvi to give orders."

The Pope.—A Paris letter says the resources of Pius IX are exhausted, the collection of Peter's pence has been a miserable failure, the revenue from the provinces which have placed themselves under the Government of Victor Emmanuel is suddenly cut off, the Pontifical army has no longer an existence, and the temporal rule of the Papacy is drawing to a close.

The World.—The North British Review, discoursing on the doom of the world, has the following remarks:

"What this change is to be we dare not conjecture, but we see in the heavens themselves some traces of destructive elements and some indications of their power; the fragments of broken planets, the descent of meteoric stones upon our globe, the whirling comets wielding their loose material at the solar surface, the volcanic eruption in our own satellite, the appearance of new stars and the disappearance of others, are all foreshadows of that impending convulsion to which this world was doomed. Thus placed on a planet which is to be burned up, and under heavens which are to pass away—thus residing, as it were, on the cemeteries and dwelling on the mausoleums of the former worlds, let us learn the lesson of humility and wisdom, if we have not already been taught in the school of revelation."

French.—The Council of War which was lately held at St. Cloud was attended by all the Marshals of France save one—Marshal Bosquet—who was detained by sickness, and the importance of the meeting may be inferred from the fact that they had a continuous session of four hours.

☞ In Florence a book has appeared with the singular title, "One Hundred and Seventy-one Rebellions in the Papal States from the year 896 to 1859."

Notices, &c.

☞ NOTICE! NOTICE! ☜

To brethren having my books I would say that I am very much in need of the amount of them. Most of them have been out two years, and as I am closing up the accounts, I wish you would attend to it immediately. If you have any on hand not sold, please return them to the Crisis office. Don't be heedless and subject me to further trouble; for I have settled with Bro. Hastings and paid him the cash for all that is out, and if you don't pay me, or send the book back, I lose it. Come, be honest; you will if you are a christian or a man. If you have forgot the account, I will soon refresh your memory by publishing your names, with the number of books you have had. Hiram Munger.

Erratum.—In the notice of Bro. Flint's death, I was made to say that the funeral was on "Tuesday." It should have read Sunday. J. S. White.

☞ Bro. Rufus Wendell would request the friends who desired his labors at Fishkill Landing, N. Y., to communicate with him by letter at Albany, N. Y.

To our Western Friends.

We would suggest to those remitting small sums from the Western States that they send us postage stamps—as, for the present, there is twenty per cent. discount—too much for either party to lose.

Acknowledgement.

The person who forwarded to my address a package of religious Tracts, will please accept my thanks. Not knowing who sent them, I am obliged to acknowledge the kindness through the Crisis. H. W. Dann.

West Troy, N. Y.

Conference at Concord, N. H.

A general conference is appointed to commence at the meeting-house on the corner of Centre and Green streets, on Wednesday evening, Dec. 12th, and continue over the following Sabbath. Eld. Miles Grant and others are expected as laborers. T. M. Preble.

☞ My appointment at London Ridge for the first Sabbath in Dec. conflicts with a previous one. I therefore withdraw it, and appoint to preach at the "Clark meeting-house" in Barnstead on that day. T. M. P.

Notice.

Northern Illinois and Southern Wisconsin Quarterly Conference will be held at Harvard, McHenry Co., Ill., to commence Friday, Dec. 28th, 2 o'clock, where Bro. Reed may appoint. In behalf of the church, Robert Crown, Evangelist.

Notice.

I wish to say through the Crisis that I am ready to spend my whole time in the field as an Evangelist, and shall try to furnish tracts and works to give to the needy, and sell to those that will buy. I here offer myself to all Christian Associations, to act as agent for them in behalf of our absent Lord, and will endeavor to attend to all calls within my limited ability, at the same time believing the body well knows that the laborer is worthy of his hire, and will be happy to comply with all that should wish my labor, by their addressing me at Plum River, Jo Davis Co., Ill. Robt. Crown, Evangelist.

Notice.

All who wish to preach in the Chapel of the Second Advent Association of Scitico, Conn., are expected to confer with the Clerk of said Association. Per order, C. W. Baker, Clerk.

ESPECIAL BOOK NOTICE.

English Bibles.

We have just received a well assorted selection of genuine English Bibles, the prices of which we affix below. Having paid cash for them, we get them at the lowest prices, and therefore can afford to sell them for cash at the lowest retail rates. There is a heavy duty levied upon all printed matter coming from the English side of the line; but, all things taken into account, we offer them lower than sold elsewhere, as follows:—

Pearl, (reference betwixt the verses) roan binding, $1.25; postage 14 cts.
Pearl, do. do. colored calf, $1.50; postage 15 cts.
Pearl, do. do. morocco, $1.62; postage 15 cts.
Nonpareil, do. do. roan, $1.50; postage 21 cts.
Do. do. do. morocco, $2.25; postage 21 cts.
Minion, do. do. roan, $1.75; postage 26 cts.
Do. do. do. morocco, $2.50; postage 26 cts.

Please send in your orders, which shall be promptly attended to.

A Proposition.

To any one who will send us a new subscriber for one year, we will forward, post paid, a copy of our late discussion with Eld. W. W. Clayton, on the conscious state of the spirit after death, and the destruction of the wicked. And for a new subscriber for six months, we will send a copy of the pamphlets on "Soul" and "Spirit." With a little effort, a thousand names may be added to our list. Let every reader try to aid in scattering the light and truth. Now is the time to work.

Thoughts that Come.

AIR—"Prairie Flower."

When the King of glory shall to earth descend,
Then the pilgrim's sorrows have an end;
Every tear is wiped, and hushed is every sigh,—
With light and love shall beam each eye.
Round Him shall be gathered all the sons of earth,
From the halls of mourning and of mirth,—
From the toils of life and from the dreary tomb
They haste to hear their final doom.

CHORUS.

Listening with wonder while they sing,
"Holy, holy, holy is the Lamb!
Let all the earth his praise proclaim."

Angels about above and mortals shout below,
Shouting still to meet them mortals go;
All the pure and holy—lovely ones and fair—
Then meet their Savior in the air.
Ever in His presence all the faithful stand,
Having palms of victory in their hands;
Singing the "new song" that never can grow old,
They strike the harp, the harp of gold.

Then, ye mourning mothers, surely ye shall meet
All those lovely flowers ye thought so sweet;
Fondly ye shall fold them in immortal arms,
And smile to see their new-born charms.
Jesus smiles upon them in their Eden home,
Met at last where sorrows ne'er can come;
Happy, happy beings, free from every care,
Ye fadeless crowns of light shall wear.

THE BIBLE A SUFFICIENT CREED.

How delightful it would be, if all men believed the Bible a sufficient creed, and that all other creeds were useless and vain; and if all believers in the Lord Jesus Christ minded the same things and spake the same things. We could never see the necessity of human creeds, confessions of faith, etc. We ask those who hold to these things, why they have them? They tell us it is best to have the doctrines necessary to be believed, selected from the Scriptures and arranged in systematic order. We may infer from this that all other doctrines, not contained in the creed, are not worthy of our faith, that they are unnecessary and foolish. To our mind, those who make creeds, and those who hold to them, virtually discard all other Scripture than what is found in the creed. Do they not plainly intimate, when they say "these things you are to believe," "these are the doctrines which demand your approval and reception," that contrary or opposite doctrines are false even if they should be plainly taught in the Word of God?

They say that the doctrines found in the creed are taken from the Bible. But why should that be done? They can neither do or receive harm by remaining in the Bible. Why not leave them in God's Word? Ought we not to infer that these creed makers and supporters are afraid that the "common" people might imbibe error, if they were permitted to "search the Scriptures" in order to find the things they must believe? They know full well that no unbiased, free and unprejudiced mind would discover the dogmas that originated in the Nicene Council and others, in the Bible.

For instance. Would such a mind discover that "God is without body or parts and passion, and in unity of the Godhead there are three self-existent persons of equal power, substance and glory?" Does the Bible teach that God has no form? Does it say that God, whose "eye is in every place, beholding the evil and the good," has no eyes? Does it say that the Being "whose ear is ever open to the cry of the righteous" cannot hear? Does it teach that God who is "angry with the wicked," who loved the world so, that he gave his Son to die for it, has no passions? What kind of a being would they make the Almighty to be?

But we are digressing—we will defer the examination of the creeds until some future time. One reason often given in defence of the creed is, that it is necessary to have a certain set of articles of faith in order to bind the church together—to prevent dissention. Well, does it keep them united? Does it prevent dissention and divis- [illegible] brethren united? Nay, for we see five or six branches of that sect. Does a creed keep the Presbyterians together? We think not, for there are six or more divisions in that denomination. But there can be no just reasons given for the necessity of creeds. If they are extracted from the Bible, they are not necessary, for the Bible contains all that is in the creed (as they say).

It is not expedient to examine the origin of creeds—how and when made, etc. One thing is evident; they are a human invention. They were made as a substitute for the Bible. How kind these gentlemen were to select all the essential doctrines for us, so that we need not have to read that "dull" book through in order to find the truths we are to receive? Very kind in them! Why we might receive the errors in the Bible as well as the truths, if we were permitted to read for ourselves. Not only does the presence of creeds in the church imply the insufficiency of the Bible as a rule of faith and practice, but also [illegible] has power to make a rule that [illegible] the purposes for which the [illegible] some of the [illegible] can do [illegible] implies that man can establish a basis or bond of union superior to that presented by the Ruler of the universe.

But is the Bible sufficient? Is it a sufficient creed? Need we any other? We desire to know the nature, character and purposes of God;—what can teach us? The Bible. We desire to know of the nature, character, mission, work, and the consequences of the work, of the Son of God; what alone can inform us? The Bible. We want to know of the Holy Spirit's nature and work. We want information relative to the creation of the world, of man, of his fall, of its results, of the plan of redemption, of the future of man, of the resurrection, of the kingdom of Christ, of immortality;—what can satisfy us? The BIBLE only. Then away with creeds, away with these humbugs. Give me the Bible and the BIBLE ALONE. The "Bible is a sufficient CREED."

Old Theology.

The following interesting comments on various portions of Scripture are from the writings of Matthew Henry. He was born in Flintshire, England, in 1663. He was a devoted christian, and a distinguished commentator. Says Wm. Romaine, "There is no comment upon the Bible, either ancient or modern, in all respects equal to Mr. Henry's."—ED. CRISIS.

On Luke 12 : 45, 46 : "Our looking at Christ's second coming as a thing at a distance, is the cause of all those irregularities which render the thought of it terrible to us."

On watching: "To watch implies not only to believe that our Lord will come, but to desire that he would come, to be often thinking of his coming, and always looking for it as sure and near, and the time of it uncertain. To watch for Christ's coming is to maintain that gracious temper and disposition of mind which we would be willing that our Lord, when he comes, should find us in. To watch is to be aware of the first notices of his approach, that we may immediately attend his motions and address ourselves to the duty of meeting him." On 2d Pet. 3d chap., of the final fire he says: "It is yet to come, and will surely come, though we know not when nor upon what particular age or generation of men; and therefore we are not, we cannot be, sure that it may not happen in our own times."

"On John 18 : 19 : "It is meet that disciples should be warned of the haste and end of time, and apprised as much as may be of the prophetic periods of time."

On Rom. 8 chap., Henry makes "the creature" to mean "the whole frame of nature, especially that of this lower world; the whole creation, the compages of inanimate and sensible creatures;" the vanity and bondage and corruption is the curse to which the whole creation is subject, now "hastening to a total dissolution by fire." He says: "the creature, that is now thus burdened, shall, at the time of the restitution of all things, be delivered from this bondage into the glorious liberty of the children of God. They shall no more be subject to vanity and corruption, and the other fruits of the curse; but, on the contrary, this lower world shall be renewed, when there will be new heavens and a new earth, 2d Pet. 3 : 13; Rev. 21 : 1; and there shall be a glory conferred upon all the creatures which shall be (in the proportion of their natures,) as suitable and as great an advancement as the glory of the children of God shall be to them. The fire at the last day shall be a refining, not a destroying, annihilating fire." Compare with this Ps. 96 : 10—13; Ps. 98 : 7—9, "Let the heavens rejoice," etc.

On verse 19, "At the second coming of Christ there will be a manifestation of the children of God. Now, the saints are God's hidden ones, the wheat seems lost in a heap of chaff; but then they shall be manifested. * * * And this redemption of the creature is reserved till then; for as it was with man and for man that they fell under the curse, so with man and for man shall they be delivered. All the [illegible] and filth that now adheres to the creature shall be done away then, when those that have suffered with Christ upon earth shall reign with him on earth. This the whole creation looks and longs for.

Verse 23. We groan within or among ourselves. It is the unanimous vote, the joint desire of the whole church; all agree in this. Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly. The groaning notes a very earnest and importunate desire, the soul pained with the delay, * * groans not as the pangs of our dying, but as the throes of a woman in travail, groans that are symptoms of life, not of death."

2 Pet. 3. "That time which men think to be the most improper and unlikely, and therefore are most secure, will be the time of the Lord's coming. Let us then beware how we in our thoughts and imaginings put that day far away from us; let us rather suppose it to be so much nearer in reality, by how much further off it is in the opinion of the ungodly world."

"The first coming of our Lord Jesus Christ was what the people of God earnestly waited and looked for; that coming was for the consolation of Israel. How much more should they wait with expectation and earnestness for his second coming, which will be the day of their complete redemption, and of his most glorious manifestation?"

"They (the wicked,) will still attack us till the end of time; till our Lord is come, they will not themselves believe that he will come; nay, they will laugh at the very mention of his second coming, and do what in them lies to put all out of countenance who seriously believe and wait for it."

On Luke 18 : 8, "Now when he comes will he find faith in the earth? The question implies a strong negative; no, he shall not, he himself foresees it. * * In general he will find but few good people, few that are really and truly good; many that have the form and fashion of godliness, but few that have faith. Even to the end of time there will be occasion for the same complaint; the world will grow no better, no, not when drawing towards its period. Bad it is, and bad it will be, and worst of all just before Christ's coming; the last times will be the most perilous. In particular he will find few that have faith concerning his coming. It intimates that he will delay his coming so long that wicked people will begin to defy it, and to say, 'Where is the promise of his coming?' They will challenge him to come.—Isa. 5 : 18, 19, and Amos 5 : 18, 19, and his delay will harden them in their wickedness. Even his own people will begin to despair of it, and to conclude he will never come, because he has passed their reckoning."

The foregoing is from "Ancient Landmarks," No. 3, prepared and published by H. L. Hastings, Providence, R. I.

Bestir thee, betimes!

Oh! be thou zealous in thy youth;
Fill every day with noble toils,
Fight for the victories of truth,
And deck thee with her deathless spoils.
For those whose lives are in retreat,
Their valor and ambition flown,
In vain the 'larum drum is beat!
In vain the battle-trumpet blown!

For the Crisis.

"I have chosen Thee in the Furnace."

Shall we be weary of the fight, impatient for the victory, covet the compensation, before the work is done? The divine plan which the great Architect has laid, to build up a spiritual house, a holy priesthood, is perfect, glorious; what other would thus develop character? And because he hath chosen us in the furnace of affliction, shall we complain? If suffering becomes the motive power to press the precious freight on to perfection, shall we repine? Never!

Happiness abstract from sorrow, is not a spontaneous fruit of nature, and wisely withheld from man, even christians. The heart may bound with the joy that is unspeakable and full of glory, but it is not the real harvest; anticipation or hope is its brightest feature; what little we glean before its realization is by patient endurance of our own, and cheerful alleviation of the sorrows of others.

A consciousness of having done right brings with it its own reward; but with it comes the assurance that wrong exists, that constant watchfulness is necessary to keep the ground which we have gained by many conflicts, and repeated failures. The fruits and graces of the Spirit have an heavenly birth, and clothe us in part with the future joy. When the bitterness of sin is taken from the heart, and we receive the transforming power, we become happy through obedience and suffering, having the faith of assurance and hope which is like an anchor. But this joy which is only a shadow of good things to come, is exalted far above what the worldling can conceive.

The formation of character, human beings fitting for immortality, is an interesting spectacle to God, angels, and thinking men. Mortals working with God, stepping higher and higher in moral and intellectual achievements, changed from glory to glory in the perfecting furnace, beginning with the blade and passing through each wonderful change, until we see the full ripe corn in the ear,—not only interesting, but important in its connection with the immortal state, as seed time is to the harvest. Viewed in this light every tear becomes a gem to beautify the crown of our rejoicing, each sigh the incense wafted from the oblation of blood-stained battles, over which wave the peaceful banners of Israel, bearing the significant motto—"Consecration to God."

We must fully count the cost, and understand the plan, in order to stand. Endure hardness, to be an efficient soldier; find joy in temptation, and glory in the cross. We shall cease to desire pleasure, or ease, as a mere animal or sensual gratification, when we begin to sow to the Spirit.

Thus we find it is through much tribulation we are to enter the rest that remains for the people of God; and that in all ages prophets and apostles have loved the thorny way, martyrs have chosen it, and christians down in these last days will walk in it, and with joy and thanksgiving suffer with Christ, bear the reproach, refuse honors, deal justly, walk humbly, and keep themselves unspotted from the world; and when the triumph comes for Israel, they will share in her glory.

Selections.

Probable Result of the Fall of the Pope.

It is very likely that immediately after any adversity should befall the Pope, whether humiliation or exile, the fervent devotion of Catholics would increase. For a time he might exercise a greater influence than ever over the pious throughout Europe. It is very likely, too, that, for centuries to come, some dreamy doctrine of the "infallibility of the Pope" would haunt the minds of scattered sectaries, who would look with contempt on all the national churches which, in the course of those centuries, had sprung up. Do not the Parsees hold their ground to this very day? Does not some traveler tell us of three wise men who met in the ruins of Baalbec to kindle a sacred fire, and perform some annual rite? These wise men were persuaded that, if this fire were not annually kindled, the world would cease to exist. What we venture with confidence to predict is this, that if the Pope is the subject of the King of Italy, he will not long be the head of the Church of France. France, and other christian monarchies, will acknowledge no higher ecclesiastical functionary than their own bishop or archbishop. If the Pope should emigrate into France, other governments would be equally slow to receive him as the head of their own ecclesiastical establishments. It is not necessary to argue this point. The mere statement of the case must bring conviction, we think, to every man who is at all accustomed to reflect on the springs of human action. If two European nations are rivals of each other in power, and wealth and knowledge,—in everything that constitutes national greatness,—neither would accept the high-priest of the other as the head of its own clergy.

This division of the universal church into so many national churches, does not imply necessarily the advance of Protestantism, but it inevitably entails a diminution of the ecclesiastical power. It will permit the religious establishments of each country more freedom to conform themselves to the growing intelligence of each country. At present, a refractory clergy gains a support from without. Say that six nations, independent in their civil government, were linked together by one common ecclesiastical institution, no reform of a religious nature could be effected by either, till it had obtained in its favor a majority of the six. The clergy of every nation would be supported, or would be restrained (if they themselves should be liberally disposed) by the general spirit pervading the whole clergy. And this general spirit would find its representative and executive in the permanent head of the united hierarchy. If an archbishop of Cologne rebels against the municipal regulations of his country, he appeals to a foreign priesthood for sympathy and support. If an Emperor of Austria wishes to repress the little philosophy that appears in his states, and, under the plea of fostering piety and morality, to keep the people from the least freedom of religious inquiry, he enters into an agreement with the Pope, and the Pope grants fresh powers to his bishops. If in France a spirit of concession should arise among the clergy themselves, the reaction takes the form of an ultramontane faction. To all this there will be an end. In every country the clergy will feel themselves essentially national, and their teachings will more readily be modified according to the advancing intelligence of the nation.

The formation of a great Italian monarchy will be the downfall of the present ecclesiastical system, and no country will reap so much benefit from the change as Italy herself. The new Italy cannot relinquish her Rome; Rome cannot submit to be handed over to an ecclesiastical caste, who are to continue to govern it without one generous sympathy in all that constitutes a national life—a caste of celibates, who must either rule in the spirit of monks, or of profligate men, reckless of domestic virtues as of national greatness. The spectacle of a city coerced perpetually by a military force to live under a monastic government, could not be endured; and if Rome is to be the capital of the new Italy, it can no longer give a Pope to France. The government that has its seat at Paris cannot consent to this. The spirit of rivalry that must arise between the two nations would utterly forbid it. Thus the great ecclesiastical system, which nets the several Catholic nations together, would be broken up. To this extent we venture to prophecy, but no further.—Blackwood's Magazine.

Transcendentalism.

This word is in frequent use, but is not always correctly understood. Anything which is peculiarly abstruse or absurd, which is so profound that no bottom can be discovered or so shallow that it cannot even be skimmed, which contains the best lessons of wisdom or the shabbiest philosophy of the pretender, which is expressed in the simple language of Plato or the bombast of the modern newspaper scribbler, is indifferently called transcendental. But the true signification is this: The basis of Lock's philosophical system is that all knowledge is received into the soul through the medium of the senses, and is to be judged of and analyzed by the understanding. This may be called the sensuous philosophy. Kant, on the contrary, denies that all knowledge is received through the senses, and maintains that the highest and universally-received truths are communicated to a faculty within the soul transcending the mere understanding, which he denominates pure reason, distinguishing it from the understanding. According to this system all perceptions of the true, the beautiful, and the good are revealed to the pure reason; while it is the province of the understanding to determine upon external things, such as facts, scientific laws, etc. This philosophy is named transcendental.

Straining after Popularity.

The lack of piety shows itself, in our day, in straining after popularity. One is truly popular by the force of his talents and the favor of his piety; another, because he seeks it as a main end.

How many and sad are the lessons taught us by the history of the church, as to the great evils arising from an unconverted ministry! How sadly the Jewish Church suffered from false prophets! It was an unconverted apostle that betrayed the Lord of glory! For how many ages were the boasted successors of the apostles the vilest of men! And how, even now, in Germany, the lowest infidelity is decked in the robes of the ministry; and in England, the merest worldlings, because second or subsequent sons of the gentry, are promoted to church benefices! and how, in communions regarded as evangelical, an unsanctified ministry are prostituting the order and ordinances of God's house to the purposes of superstition, and to the supplanting of a spiritual, by a formal and ritual, religion, in our own country.

Piety, then, is the first great essential element of a true minister of the gospel. Without this a preacher is but a sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal.

One of the commonest and surest signs of "an unconverted ministry" is to be found in the clerical apologies for slavery, or silence in respect to its abominations, like the false prophets in the Jewish Church." The love of popularity, and the fear of being unpopular with worldly, wicked men, is evidently the temptation that overcomes them.—Ex.

Here is my Heart.

"My son, give me thine heart."—PROV. 23 : 25.

Here is my heart!—my God, I give it Thee;
I heard Thee call and say,
"Not to the world, my child, but unto me;"
I heard and will obey.
Here is love's offering to my King,
Which, a glad sacrifice, I bring—
Here is my heart.

Here is my heart!—surely the gift, tho' poor,
My God will not despise;
Vainly and long I sought to make it pure,
To meet thy searching eyes;
Corrupted first in Adam's fall,
The stains of sin pollute it all—
My guilty heart!

Here is my heart!—my heart so hard before,
Now by thy grace made meet;
Yet bruised and wearied, it can only pour
Its anguish at thy feet;
It groans beneath the weight of sin,
It sighs salvation's joy to win—
My mourning heart!

Here is my heart!—in Christ its longings end,
Near to his Cross it draws;
It says, "Thou art my portion, O my Friend,
Thy blood my ransom was."
And in the Savior it has found
What blessedness and peace abound—
My trusting heart!

Here is my heart!—ah! Holy Spirit, come,
Its nature to renew,
And consecrate it wholly as thy home,
A temple fair and true.
Teach it to love and serve Thee more,
To fear Thee, trust Thee, and adore—
My cleansed heart!

Here is my heart!—it trembles to draw near
The glory of Thy throne:
Give it the shining robe Thy servants wear,
Of righteousness thine own;
Its pride and folly chase away,
And all its vanity, I pray—
My humbled heart.

Here is my heart!—teach it, O Lord, to cling
In gladness unto Thee;
And in the day of sorrow still to sing,
"Welcome my Lord's decree,"
Believing, all its journey through,
That Thou art wise, and just and true—
My waiting heart!

Here is my heart!—O Friend of friends, be near,
To make each tempter fly,
And when my latest foe I wait with fear,
Give me the victory!
Gladly on thy love reposing,
Let me say, when life is closing—
Here is my heart!

Confidence in Christ.

The dew of thy grace is shed upon my wasting spirit with refreshing consolation. My soul languishes, but soon it will exult in thee; my flesh withereth, but after a few days it will revive. I am compelled to undergo corruption, but thou wilt free me from this decay when thou bringest me out of all evils. Thou hast newly created me in the image of God, and how can the works of thy hands perish? Thou hast redeemed me from all my foes, and how shall death alone triumph over me? Thou hast devoted thy body, thy blood, and thine entire self for my salvation; how then shall death hinder those benefits which were bought with so precious a price? Thou art my righteousness, and my sins shall not prevail over thee; thou art my life and resurrection, and my death shall not overcome thee; thou art my God, and Satan shall not have power over thee. Thou hast given me the earnest of the Spirit, and, in this will I triumph; and I firmly believe, nothing doubting, that thou wilt permit me to enter into the marriage-supper of the lamb. Thou hast clothed me with the wedding-garment, which I received when baptized (Gal. 3 : 27,) into Christ; nor will I stitch to this precious, most beautiful robe, the tattered rags of my righteousness. How dare I spoil its beauty with my abominable tatters? In this robe will I appear before thy face, when thou wilt judge the world in righteousness and truth.—Gerhard's Meditations.

"The American Dress."

It is over a year since I donned the costume which Dr. Austin calls "the American dress," and it has already worked wonders for me, in relieving me of innumerable aches and pains. I have been for years a great sufferer from nearly every female difficulty of which our flesh is "heir to," and many of my female readers can sympathize with me by sorrowful experience. Indeed, I felt it to be an intolerable burden,—the weight of skirts which fashion said I must wear to be "decent." Says one, "why didn't she get her a patent skirt and skirt supporter? they are light." My dear, I did. I paid two dollars for a hoop skirt, and before two months I thought the old adage a true one, "that the fool and his money are soon parted." I think I can prove by the steel-yards that the present style of female dress (especially at this season of the year) is far from light. Just think, for instance, of the inconsistency of calling a dress "LIGHT," that is composed of thick, warm drawers, under skirts of flannel, (and some I know who, in place of the latter, wear a quilt weighing two and three pounds,) then a full hoop skirt, then over skirts sufficient to "hide our ribs;" after this a dress of six, seven, or more widths, lined. O "consistency, truly thou art a jewel." Now, to think of all this "lightness" hanging around our sides until (as I have myself experienced, and often hear the complaint from other females,) we feel as though we were being torn asunder—not an agreeable feeling, to say the least; and I am confident it was caused by the long, heavy robes in which I have ever been clad, as my good mother (who now sleeps in Jesus)—blessed be her memory—never allowed me to wear the "short dress and pantaletts" in which the "good little girls gained a little health and strength to commence the life battle of kicking at long skirts."

And then again; to us farmers' wives, who do our own work, (as we ought) how very inconvenient to go up stairs, wanting to carry both hands full; but, as the robes must be carried, of course you must "go again."

I have experienced none of those painful sensations of which I spoke, since I donned the "short dress and pants," which I deem more healthy, much more comfortable, and certainly more convenient than long robes; in short, just the thing. And with Dr. Austin I readily agree, that I could walk two miles with as little or even less fatigue in the above named dress, than one half mile in the long, heavy skirts, worn by females at present. One thing is certain; my health is improving, my numerous pains and aches have disappeared almost entirely.

To remove Nasal Obstructions.

The following simple item of information should be known in every family, as it would often save the fond parent a deal of anxiety.

To remove obstructions from the nostrils, such as beans, small buttons, etc., which children frequently put up the nose, cover the child's mouth with your own, and blow with a firm and steady breath down its throat, and it will instantly throw from the nose whatever may have lodged therein.

How to be Healthy.

Breathe, then, good reader! Take in large quantities of the immaculate fire! Let every woman (and every lady, sans fashion) give free play to her lungs; and let every man also open his mouth to the blessings of air, ("no smoking allowed,") so that all food swallowed shall be transformed into the foundation of rosy health, and every soul be a living fountain of gratitude and gladness. Bathe your body with pure water; then rub your entire skin briskly with a soft flannel cloth; lastly, make passes with your hands—so that an electrical condition will exist externally, and as a consequence the internal surfaces be supplied with healthy magnetism. The opposite of this condition is disease. When the surface is hot or feverish, the vital parts are negative and electrical; the exact reverse of the state of health—when the surface is pleasantly cool with electricity while the interior is magnetically warm with vital energy.

For the Crisis.

"Salt is Good."—Jesus.

In the earlier ages of the world we find salt is noticed as being an important article used in the service of God, and for the benefit of man. God required that salt should be offered with all the offerings. Lev. 2 : 13.—"And every oblation of thy meat-offering shalt thou season with salt; neither shalt thou suffer the salt of the covenant of thy God to be lacking from thy meat-offering: with all thine offerings thou shalt offer salt." Not only were these offerings to be with salt, but some of them were to be eaten. Lev. 6 : 18.—"All the males among the children of Aaron shall eat of it." Verse 26.—"The priest that offereth it for sin shall eat of it: in the holy place shall it be eaten." "And the Lord spake unto Aaron, Behold, I also have given thee the charge of mine heave-offerings of all the hallowed things of the children of Israel; unto thee have I given them by reason of the anointing, and to thy sons, by an ordinance forever. This shall be thine of the most holy things reserved from the fire: every oblation of theirs, every meat-offering of theirs, and every sin-offering of theirs, and every trespass-offering of theirs, which they shall render unto me, shall be most holy for thee and for thy sons. In the most holy place shalt thou eat it; every male shall eat it: it shall be holy unto thee. And this is thine: the heave-offering of their gift, with all the wave-offerings of the children of Israel: I have given them unto thee, and to thy sons, and to thy daughters with thee, by a statute forever: every one that is clean in thy house shall eat of it."—Num. 18 : 8–11. Job asked, "Can that which is unsavory be eaten without salt? or is there any taste in the white of an egg?"

The question before us is not whether salt can be eaten, but whether it may be eaten, as something good. Jesus said to his disciples in his sermon on the mount, "Ye are the salt of the earth; but if the salt have lost his savor, wherewith shall it be salted? it is thenceforth good for nothing, but to be cast out, and trodden under the foot of men." And again, "Ye are the light of the world."—Matt. 5 : 13–14. He tells them that they are the salt and the light of the world. Now if you say, Away with your salt, for that is bad, then we say, by the same rule, Away with your light, for that is bad. Salt is good unless it has lost its saltness, and so ceased to be salt; so light is good, unless it has become darkness and so ceased to be light. "Have salt in yourselves, and have peace one with another."—Mark 9 : 50. "Let your speech be always with grace, seasoned with salt, that ye may know how ye ought to answer every man."—Col. 4 : 6. Paul here puts salt as a symbol of wisdom.

We find that God in the Old Testament required the use of salt in food to be eaten. Jesus and the apostles, instead of prohibiting the use of it, have in all they have said spoken in favor of it.

But it is objected, that persons may be made sick by the use of salt. This we admit; but it does not follow that salt should not be used. A person may be made sick by eating meal pudding,—half a peck at a time; but it does not follow that pudding should not be eaten. Persons have been made sick, and killed too, by the use of water, both internal and external, for it can be done as easily in the one case as the other. Continual drinking or washing with water, though it be "soft water," will destroy health and life. But shall we say that persons should never drink or never wash?

It may be said that there is no nourishment in salt. We reply, there is no nourishment in water except in the animals which the water contains. Then away with your water, because there is no nourishment in it. Besides, let those who refuse animal food, reject the water for the latter reason, as well as for the former, unless they will strain out the gnats, to say nothing of swallowing the larger animal.

Men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. And these holy men eat salt. Then let those who sneeringly say that the Holy Ghost will not dwell in a person who eats salt, look at the law and the testimony; for "if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."

In reply to the Savior, "Salt is good," it may be said, salt is good for sacrifices. So the anti-salt-eater would help Jesus out with his meaning, or he would correct him in his application of the passage; for it is manifest that he had no reference to the sacrifices under the law. And admitting that he did, it is obvious that he did not confine it to the law; for he told the disciples to have salt in themselves. And the apostle has told us to present our "bodies a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable to God." Now as every sacrifice must be salted with salt, must we not have salt in our bodies in order to be acceptable to God? Think of this, ye who think obedience is better than sacrifice. If you offer sacrifice, do it with salt, as God has commanded.

There may be times when salt should not be eaten; and there are times when bread should not be eaten, nor any thing else, and cannot be eaten without positive injury. If it be said that we can live without salt, we say in reply, that we can live without any other one article that we eat. But does it follow that that article is not good? Neither does it follow that salt is not good. Jesus knew whereof he affirmed. "Be not wise above what is written."

NEUTRALIZING POISONS.—A poison of any considerable description and degree of potency which has been intentionally or accidentally swallowed, may be rendered instantly harmless by simply swallowing two gills of sweet oil. An individual with a very strong constitution should take nearly twice the quantity.—N. Y. Post.

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,

Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months	15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for three months for 50 cents, which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of brethren, they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Rules for Correspondents.

Over all matters not intended for publication, write PRIVATE.

Over all communications for the paper, write FOR THE CRISIS.

Over all business matters, write BUSINESS.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to ELD. MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass.

The postage on the Crisis, if prepaid, quarterly or yearly, at the office where it is received, will be 13 cents a year to any part of Massachusetts, and 26 cents to any other part of the United States.

☞ Canada Subscribers have to pre-pay the postage on their papers, 26 cents a year, in addition to the above; i. e., $1 will pay for twenty-three numbers, or $2.26 a year. The same for the Provinces.

Time is Flying.

BY S. S. BREWER.

Tune—"Land of my home is fleeting."

Swift onward time is flying,
Bearing us away,
Probation is expiring—
'T is the close of day.

CHORUS.

Roll on, ye dark waves o'er the troubled tide,
I heed not your dangers while Christ is by my side;
My own loving Savior, guide me, keep me near thy side;
Jesus, fill my heart with love; ever be my Guide.

Perils thicken all around me,
The world is sad and drear;
Firm ever let my faith be,
While thy voice I hear.

Sin and sorrows now abounding,
Love is growing cold,—
"Peace and safety" loud is sounding,
Scoffers have grown bold.

Fierce now the storm is breaking
On the distant shore;
Kingdoms are reeling, shaking,
Loud the tempests roar.

By faith my home is nearing,
Nearing to my view;
Darkness is disappearing,
Soon we shall be through.

Prayer.

Prayer is the language of want. Prayer moves the arm that moves the universe. Prayer has shut the windows of heaven that it rained not, and again opened them that it might rain. And yet there are many of my brethren who are professedly looking for the speedy consummation of Israel's hope, who (judging by their fruits) ignore it altogether; and to such I must say, they are bringing a reproach upon the cause of our blessed Lord and Master. For one, I am thankful that God ever taught me to pray. And when I look back through the record God has given us of his ancient worthies, my soul is encouraged. When I read of a Jacob that wrestled with God, and prevailed; of an Elijah who, through prayer, caused the windows of heaven to be closed that it rained not for the space of three years; and again surrounded by Baal's prophets, praying until fire descends from heaven and consumes the offering upon the altar, and licks the very water up from the trenches round about the altar;—when I read of a Daniel who, though the decree had gone forth,—and that according to the law of the Medes and Persians altereth not,—was found three times a day making prayer and supplication to God; and at another time making prayer until the man Gabriel was sent to give him skill and understanding;—when I read of a Paul and Silas who, though incarcerated in prison, prayed and sung praises to God until the prison was shaken to its very centre, and its doors extended open that the prisoners might escape;—when I read of these many instances in which prayer prevailed with God, and realise that he is the same yesterday, to-day and forever, and then look around me and see the little apparent interest among my fellow travelers to that better country to sustain this one and only living element of the christian; it has seemed to me that if I held my peace, the very stones would cry out.

My heart has been made sad when I have contemplated the good we might have done, the light we might have shed abroad, to enlighten the way of those that walk in darkness; the growth that we ourselves might have made in grace and a knowledge of the truth; if, Daniel-like, instead of standing in our own boasted strength, we had been found often upon our bended knees pleading with the Almighty in our own behalf and in the behalf of the whole Israel of God.

But that is not the worst. When I hear the world and the church say they have not so much objection to our doctrine if we only believed in prayer and the practical part of godliness, my heart is sadder still. And for this reason I say, as a people, so far as my knowledge extends, we are too indifferent in regard to these things, and have thereby brought reproach upon the cause of our Master. There may be exceptions; I believe there are glorious exceptions, and thank God for those few; and wherever you find one of them, you find a church in a prosperous condition; they not only walk in the light themselves, but that light is reflected from them, that those in darkness may catch a gleam of it as they grope their way along. This is no idle tale; some of you, my brethren and sisters, know it is true; you have undoubtedly felt it to be true, and from the fact that it is true, have more than once been forced to cry, "O my leanness! my leanness!" But is there no balm in Gilead? no physician there? O yes! there is; it may be found beneath the bower of prayer.

Jesus, our great example, was a man of prayer. Even to the very last, amid all his trials, he could cry, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." He not only prayed for others, but was more than once found praying for himself, that he might have the needed strength to drink the bitter cup. Then let us follow our great example through evil as well as good report, that we may be found of him in peace, without spot, and blameless.

The Grave of Lazarus.

"Jesus wept!" Blessed and amazing picture of the Lord of glory! It combines the delineation alike of the tenderness of his humanity, and the majesty of his Godhead. His humanity! It is revealed in those tear-drops, falling from a human eye on a human grave. His Godhead! It is manifested in his ability to take in with a giant grasp all the prospective "fire-trials" of his suffering people. He was treading a burial ground—mouldering heaps were around him—silent, sepulchral caves, giving forth no echo of life!

It is a solemn thing and impressive, even for us to tread the graveyard; more especially if there are there nameless treasures of buried affection. The thought that those whose smile gladdened to us every step in the wilderness, who formed our solace in sorrow, and our joy in adversity—whose words, and society, and converse, were intertwined with our very being,—it is solemn and saddening, as we tread that land of oblivion, to find these words, and looks, and tears, unanswered—a gloomy silence hovering over the spot where the wrecks of worth and loveliness are laid! He would have a bold, a stern heart indeed, who could pace unmoved over such hallowed ground, and forbid a tear to flow over the gushing memories of the past! We can only understand the full import of those tears of Jesus as we imagine to ourselves his Godlike eye penetrating at that moment every churchyard and every grave. The child carried away in the twinkling of an eye—the blossom just opening, and then frost-blighted; the aged sire cut down like a shock of corn in its season, falling withered and sear like the leaves of autumn; the young exulting in the prime of manhood; the pious and benevolent, the great and good, succumbing indiscriminately to the same inexorable decree; the erring and thoughtless, reckless of all warning, hurried away in the midst of scorned mercy. Oh! as he beheld this ghastly funeral procession moving before him, the whole world going to the same long home, and he himself alone left the survivor, can we wonder that Jesus wept?

Jesus wept when he thought of the obduracy and impenitence of the human heart. This may not be at first sight patent as a cause of the tears of Jesus, but we may well believe it entered largely as an element into this strange flood of sorrow. He was about to perform a great (his greatest) miracle; but while he knew that, in consequence of this manifestation of his mighty power, many of those who now stood around Lazarus' tomb would believe, he knew also that others would "despise and wonder and perish"; that while some, as we shall afterwards find, acknowledged him as the Messiah, others went straightway into Jerusalem to concert with the Pharisees in plotting for his murder. When he observed the impenitence of these obdurate hearts at his side, he could not subdue his tenderest emotion.

We read that when he saw the sisters weeping, and the Jews that were with them weeping, Jesus wept. These Jews could weep for a fellow mortal, but they could not weep for themselves, and therefore for them Jesus wept! One soul was precious to him. He who alone can estimate alike the worth and the loss of the soul, might have wept, even had there been but one then present found to resist his claims and forfeit his own salvation. Ah! surely no cause could more tenderly elicit a Redeemer's tears than this—the thought of his redemption scorned, his blood trampled on, his work set at nought.

Reader! are you at this moment guilty of living on in a state of presumptuous impenitence—salvation unsought—Jesus a stranger—his name unhonored—his Bible unread—his promises unappropriated—his wrath undreaded—casting away from you the hoarded riches of eternity which he has been holding out for your acceptance? In that sacred Bethany ground, as ye mark those falling tear-drops which dim his eye there may have been a tear for you!

Eighteen hundred years have since elapsed, but He, to whom "a thousand years are as one day," marked even then your present ungrateful apostasy or guilty alienation—there was a tear then which stole down that cheek on account of unrequited love! Is that tear to flow in vain? Are you to mock his tender sympathy with your cold formalism or persistent impenitency? Are you to think of Bethany and its tear-drops and still go on in sin? Ah! never was a sermon preached to an erring or impenitent sinner half so eloquent as this. Paul was not given to weeping, and it makes his fervid love of souls all the more striking when we find him confessing that he had wept like a child over those who were "enemies to the cross of Christ." We have often felt Paul's burning tears over hardened sinners to be touching and impressive. But what are they, after all, in comparison with those of Paul's Lord? And still does he linger among us. Though the night cometh, the beams of mercy are still tardily lingering, as if loth to leave the backsliding to their wanderings, or the impenitent to their own midnight of despair.

O reader! leave not this subject—leave not the graveyard of Bethany till you think of Jesus as there weeping for thee. Yes! for thee—thy pitiable condition—thy perverse ingratitude—thy slighting of his warnings—thy grieving of his Spirit—thy unkindness to him—thine obstinate disregard of thine own everlasting interests. Let it be the most wondrous and heart-searching of all the memories of Bethany, that for thy soul—that traitor, truant, worthless soul—which like a stray planet he might have suffered to drift away from himself into the blackness of eternal darkness—helpless, hopeless, ruined, lost!—yes! that for thee JESUS WEPT!

Meekness.

Meekness is one of those christian virtues that lie deep in the heart. Affectation can never possess it. It shines—if it shines at all—like the pure diamond, although hidden in the frowning depths of a restless ocean. Affected meekness may wear its sober aspect in sunshine—may sparkle when no storm-cloud obscures the heavens—but let the dark mantle of thorny temptation shadow the enlivening rays of prosperity, and the frowns of an unsubdued, depraved nature cast their gloom athwart the soul,—then pride reigns instead of humility; passion, instead of true meekness.

1. True meekness subdues pride. It conquers the vain aspirations of unhallowed ambition. It casts not its eye at the gorgeous display of earthly honor. It covets not the princely robes of the mighty of earth. It walks not in the gay circles of pomp and hilarity. It shuns the adoration and idle speculation of the thoughtless crowd. It chooses the society of the lowly and the pure; or alone in the solitude of an undisturbed retreat, pours forth the vital and heart-gushing strains of prayer and praise to the Almighty Justifier of the faithful. That soul—though amid the dazzling throng of gayety and mirth may wander an exile, in the sight of heaven is rich with an everlasting and boundless inheritance.

2. True meekness seeks not the wealth of this world. It will not sell its birthright for a degrading mess of pottage. It will not hoard the riches of earth till the heart starves for vital, spiritual food. Its treasure is not among corruptible things. Its God is not an accumulated pile of moth-eaten silver. Its inheritance is not the curse-blighted territory of this earth. Its glory is not the pomp and splendor of this world. Its treasure is in heaven. Its food is the "hidden manna" of gospel grace. Its riches, territory and city, the new earth blooming in its unsullied splendor, rejoicing in its fadeless beauty of angelic purity, while the anthems of salvation roll from the golden instruments of the ransomed multitude around the pearly battlements of that holy city of templed glory and jeweled foundations. Meekness is essential—

1. Because Christ was meek. He was a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief. While the noble of earth dwelt in mansions of splendor and glory, he had not where to lay his head. While the multitudes revelled in hilarity, Jesus wept. While his chosen city spurned the offers of salvation and mercy, he mourned over them in strains of bitterness and woe. Christ is our leader—the captain of our salvation. If we would be his disciples we must follow his example. We must suffer with him if we would also reign with him. We must bear his reproach here if we would share in his honor when he inherits his glory.

2. True meekness is one of the essential pillars in the temple of God. Time was when the glory of God dwelt in temples made with hands. Now every christian is a temple of God. "Know ye not that ye are the temple of the living God and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy. For the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are."—1 Cor. 1 : 16. That temple is sanctified and illuminated by the Spirit of God. One of the fruits of the Spirit is meekness.—Gal. 4 : 23. Whoever, therefore, does not possess meekness defileth the temple of God and brings himself under just condemnation. But whoever possesses this divine grace, as such, prepares the temple of God for the indwelling of his holy presence.

3. The meek share the glory of God. "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth." Yea, verily, and "delight themselves in the abundance of peace." Disowning the riches of the present age they become sharers of the glory in the ages to come. Suffering all things and enduring all things for Christ's sake here, they become heirs of all things in the future; and by patient continuance in well-doing seek for glory, and honor, and immortality, to be bestowed at the "judgment of the great day of God Almighty."

"Universal Hebrew Alliance."

About three months since a society was formed in Paris, with the title of, "Universal Hebrew Alliance." This society has issued the following appeal, signed by Rev. A. Astruc, Assistant Grand Rabbi of Paris; Isidore Cohen, Professor of the Rabbinical Seminary; Jules Carvallo; N. Leven; E. Manuel, Professor of the University, and Ch. Nettre.—Ed. Crisis

"ISRAELITES! If, scattered over the whole surface of the earth, and intermingled with all nations, you remain attached to the old religion of your ancestors, however weak be the bond that unites you therewith;

"If you do not deny your religion, if you do not hide your culte, if you do not blush of being Israelites;

"If you abhor the prejudices still entertained against us; the reproaches raised against us; the slanders, continually repeated; the lies, perpetually renewed; the injustice done to us: the persecutions, which are either tolerated or excused;

"If you hold, that the oldest and most simple of the spiritual religions ought to maintain its place, fulfill its mission, proclaim its right, and manifest its vitality amid the great ideas that stir our days, and amid the new theories that agitate the modern society;

"If you believe, that the sublime idea and the vigorous culte of the One and indivisible God, of which we are the oldest heirs and obstinate defenders, ought to be guarded against the insinuations of doubt or indifference;

"If you maintain, that religious liberty, this life of the soul, is nowhere better guarded, for the common good of all, than in those countries in which the Jews enjoy it fully and without any restriction whatsoever;

"If you believe, that the creed, inherited from his ancestors, is for every one a sacred patrimony, that our firesides and our conscience are inviolable sanctuaries, which ought not to be invaded again, as we lately have witnessed it;

"If you hold, that unity is strength: that, although we are members of various nationalities, we may still be one in sentiments, hopes and expectations;

"If you think, that by legal means, by the invincible power of right and reason—without exciting any trouble, without frightening any power, without raising the indignation of any party, except that of ignorance, bigotry, and fanaticism—you would obtain much and impart much by your zealous work and acknowledged intelligence;

"If you agree, that a large number of your co-religionists, still under the yoke of the sufferings, proscriptions, and insults of twenty centuries, could regain their dignity as men, their rights as citizens;

"If you believe, that those who are corrupted, ought to be regenerated and not condemned; that those who are blind, ought to be enlightened, and not forsaken; and those who are afflicted, ought to be assisted, and not only pitied; that we should defend those who are calumniated, and not look on with silent compassion; that we ought to give material aid to those who are persecuted, and not merely cry and lament at their persecutions;

"If you hold, that the resources, hitherto isolated: the good intentions, one detached from another: the aspirations, started without any definite object—could be united for higher purposes, so that the united action may be felt all over the globe;

"If you hold, that it would be an honor to your religion, a lesson for the nations, a progress for humanity, a triumph for truth and reason, to see concentrated all the forces of Judaism, though small in number, but great by the innate love for the common good;

"If you hold, that the influence, which the principles of 1789 exercised all over the world, is paramount; that the law taught by these principles is a law of justice; that it is desirable, that this spirit may pervade all nations, and that the example of religious liberty is an absolute power;

"If you hold all these points to be true and correct, then, Israelites of the whole world, come, listen to our appeal, and grant us your aid and your assistance. The work is a great and blissful one. We are establishing the Universal Hebrew Alliance!" The Israelite Indeed.

"Reasons for my Hope."

The following is from Bro. Hastings' interesting work, entitled, "REASONS FOR MY HOPE." Every lover of truth should have a copy.—ED.

A new era dawns. In 1780, the Naval and Military Bible Society, the first that was founded, was organized in England and began its limited work. In 1802, Rev. Thos. Charles of Bala in Wales, meeting a little girl who attended upon his ministry, inquired of her if she could repeat last Sunday's text. She was silent, and when pressed to answer him, she burst into tears and said, "The weather, sir, has been so bad that I could not get to read the Bible." She had been accustomed to travel seven miles to read the Bible and look out the text. That week the rain had prevented her from doing so. Mr. Charles, affected by the pressing need, soon came to London to beg Bibles for the Welsh. The destitution was great. The Religious Tract Society had recently declined to grant 20,000 Bibles, which had been solicited for Wales. Mr. Charles presented the cause to them again, when the Secretary, the Rev. J. Hughes, suggested, "Surely a Society might be formed for the purpose, and if for Wales, why not for the world?" They met again May 12th, 1803, and among other incidents, Rev. Mr. Knight related how a man had "traveled sixty miles over the snow, in Nova Scotia, to obtain a Bible."

On the 7th of May, 1804, some three hundred gentlemen of all denominations met at the London Tavern, and then and there, they organized that noble institution, "The British and Foreign Bible Society." On the 3d of Sept. 1804, it was voted that a number of stereotype Bibles and Testaments should be ordered, and among them 20,000 Welsh Bibles and 5,000 Welsh Testaments were included. In Sept., 1805, the first stereotype edition of the New Testament ever printed, and the first part of the Bible ever published by the British and Foreign Bible Society, was issued from the University press at Cambridge. Other editions followed in rapid succession. In July, 1806, the Welsh Bibles and Testaments were finished and started for Wales. "When the arrival of the cart was announced which carried the first sacred load, the Welsh peasants went out in crowds to meet it; welcomed it as the Israelites did the ark of old; drew it into the town, and eagerly bore off every copy, as rapidly as they could be dispersed." *

A new era had dawned on the world. Within four years from its establishment this society either published, or was engaged in publishing, not fewer than forty-three editions of the sacred Scriptures, in seventeen different languages, forming a grand total of ONE HUNDRED AND NINETY-SIX THOUSAND COPIES. Since that time the work has progressed beyond all precedent. The Bible has spread, most gloriously, to many lands. Carey, sneered at by the proud professors of his day as "the consecrated cobbler," sailed for Calcutta, as a missionary to India, June 13th, 1793. He arrived Nov. 11th, and began his work, in which he was afterwards assisted by Dr. Marshman, and in 1813 he writes: "We are at this time engaged in translating the Bible into twenty-one languages, including the Bengalee which is finished." In July, 1832, two years before Carey's death, they were enabled to write that, "The entire Scriptures, of the Old and New Testaments, had at this time been printed and circulated in SIX oriental languages, besides the Chinese; the New Testament had been printed in twenty-three languages more; the Pentateuch and other parts of the Old Testament in several of these languages; and portions of the Scriptures had been printed in ten others, or in all FORTY LANGUAGES. * Such was the mighty progress of God's word during the laborious life of one individual; and the lapse of subsequent years gives no token that this progress is retarded.

At the end of fifty years, in March, 1854, there had been issued by the British and Foreign Bible Society alone, the vast number of twenty-seven millions, nine hundred and thirty-eight thousand, six hundred and thirty-one copies, (27,938,631) of the Bible or parts thereof, to bless and save mankind. † These Bibles were only a portion of what had been published, for besides the vast number which private enterprise had spread abroad like healing leaves, numerous other societies had been formed, so that at that date not less than forty millions of copies of the whole, or parts of the sacred oracles, had been issued by Bible societies alone, and since then millions more have been issued to supply the increasing demand. "From the first of April, 1858, to the 31st of March, 1859, the number of copies of Scripture issued by the British and Foreign Bible Society, amount to the marvelous total of one million, six hundred and twenty-five thousand, nine hundred and eighty-five copies.

At that time the same society, in addition to its immense domestic manufacture, had issued orders for the printing, in twelve different countries, of more than twelve hundred and seventy thousand copies of sacred Scripture. On the 1st of April, 1859, it is stated that the total issues of the society, excluding the past circulation of the vernacular Scriptures printed in India by the various auxiliaries, have now reached "thirty-five millions, six hundred and nine thousand, nine hundred and thirty-one copies. ‡ In 1854, there had been issued by this society, directly, the Bible, or parts thereof, in ONE HUNDRED AND ONE languages and dialects, and indirectly in FIFTY-ONE more, making in all ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY-TWO LANGUAGES OR DIALECTS in which Scripture had been issued to that date, fourteen of which versions were, however, issued by other societies. The number of different versions was one hundred and seventy-nine, and of these one hundred and twenty-five are translations never before printed.

This was in 1854. From that time to 1859, a number of new versions have been added to the list. The British and Foreign Bible Society has, during these five years, circulated seven million, six hundred and seventy-one thousand, three hundred copies of Scripture: nearly one-third as many as it had in all the preceding fifty years. Bible societies in other lands have labored with corresponding diligence in the work, and it is probable that not less than about sixty millions of copies of parts, or the whole of the sacred word, in about two hundred different translations, and in some one hundred and seventy-five or two hundred different languages or dialects, have been given to the inhabitants of the earth since the year 1804. And, at that time, there were not more than about thirty-five or forty versions of the Scriptures, ancient and modern, in different languages, in being on the earth, and several of these were in ancient tongues which no nation used or understood. Thus had darkness prevailed for the ages past, and now, lo! light arises, and manifold more translations are made, and tenfold more Bibles are issued in the last fifty years, than in the whole history of the world before! §

Well might Dr. Cotton Mather, as he saw, in 1663, a few hundred copies of the whole Scriptures in Elliott's version, issued from the press in the Indian tongue, exclaim: "Behold, ye Americans! behold the greatest honor that ever you were partakers of! The Bible was printed here at our Cambridge; and it is the only Bible that was ever printed in all America from the very foundation of the world." But in America things have changed since then. On the 12th of Dec., 1808, the Philadelphia Bible Society was formed. Six other local societies were formed in 1810, and these were followed by the American Bible Society, which was organized in New York, May 8th, 1817, and which in the space of forty years, to 1857, had issued a grand total of twelve millions, eight hundred and four thousand and fourteen copies of sacred Scripture (12,804,014). Besides this, two hundred and thirty-three thousand and thirty-nine copies of Scripture had been circulated by the Philadelphia Bible Society prior to the year 1839, when its name was changed to the Pennsylvania Bible Society, and it became an auxiliary to the American Society.

The American and Foreign Bible Society, founded in 1838, in New York, has also circulated about a MILLION copies of Scripture, and the American Bible Union, organized in 1850, has in some measure assisted in the great work. And if Mather grew so joyful over a single edition of the Bible, published in this country in a barbarous tongue, how would his pious rapture rise could he behold the mighty movement now going on in the earth. Surely he would exclaim,—"What hath God wrought!"

And all this has been done in a single generation. Men that saw its beginning see it as it is to-day. It is limited to about this very century. It is an increase of knowledge such as all the ages cannot parallel. About ten times as many Bibles have been issued and circulated during the last fifty years as has ever been issued before since the beginning of the world.

§ In 1851, at the Great Industrial Exhibition in London, a niche was found for the Volume of Inspiration, not in a solitary form, but presented in 170 different versions, containing (or representing) 130 languages; so that, of the multitudes gathered from the four quarters of the earth, that trod the floor of that spacious and beautiful edifice, it is probable there was scarcely one who might not have read or seen, "in his own tongue," a portion, at least, of the divinely inspired record. It may be here remarked, that the 170 versions which met the eye of the numerous visitors in the Crystal Palace, were selected from a still greater number, in the publication of which the society had more or less assisted.—*Hist. For the Crisis.

From Bakerville.

Perhaps many of you will wonder where Bakerville is. It is a small village in the southwest part of New Hartfort, Ct. I shall not go on to describe the place, but will tell you a little about our church (a company of believers), thinking it may be interesting to some of the pilgrims scattered abroad. I shall also write some of my own experience.

During the past year we have had joy as well as sorrow—clear sky as well as clouds. We have had precious seasons in holding communion with God. We have prayer meetings regularly every Sunday and Thursday evening. We have preaching as often as any of God's people come this way to "feed the sheep." There are a few brethren who sometimes come over from Winsted to our meetings, and as we are all the same family, we have blessed seasons. Yes, we are all striving to gain the promised land. Bro. Harris has opened his doors to the hungry pilgrims, and bids them come in and feast. This is where we generally hold our meetings; here we do really have "a feast of fat things." This has always been the house of prayer. Sr. H. is an invalid, and has been for many years, but through the goodness of God is getting better. She is one of the "loved of earth;" although weak in body, is yet strong in faith; ever looking to God in whom is her trust.

We do not enjoy as much of the love of God now as we have many times heretofore, but are hoping, praying to live more holy. We do feel that it is late to give up now, when we are so near the journey's end; but we "will not be weary in well doing." We, as well as all christians at the present day, have much to turn us aside from the path of duty, and away from God; yet we mean ever by his grace to keep near him, and be saved from sin every day, and then we know we shall be saved at the end.

Every day I feel more and more the need of being very careful what I do, what I say, and what I think, that all shall please God; and I feel that my path grows brighter and brighter. Sometimes I doubt whether I am really a child of God; yet perhaps it is wrong to ever keep this in mind; it seems like tempting him; yet I think we ought to examine ourselves and strive to make our calling and election sure. After I look back upon all the way in which the Lord has led me, the many dangers and trials that have crossed my way, I know that God has been with me; I know he will "never leave nor forsake me."

It has been a great trial to come out and profess to believe what I now do. I have lost many friends, am despised and scoffed at by those who would treat me kindly, if my belief was not what it is; but I know, though hard to bear, it will all work out for me "a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory."

H. M. HULL.

IDLENESS NOT HAPPINESS.—A common error of men and women is that of looking for happiness somewhere outside of useful work. It has never yet been found when thus sought, and never will, and the sooner this truth is learned the better for every one. If you doubt the proposition, glance around among your friends and acquaintances, and select those who appear to have the most enjoyment in life. Are they idlers and pleasure seekers, or the earnest workers? Of all the miserable human beings it has been our fortune or misfortune to know, they were the most wretched who had retired from useful employment in order to enjoy themselves. Why, the slave at his enforced labor, or the hungry toiler for bread, are supremely happy in comparison.—Wilson.

Observations on the Interpretation of the Prophetic Scriptures.

The ancients had a saying concerning the Scriptures that is useful here. They said—

"Distinguite tempora et concordabunt Scripturæ."

"Distinguish the periods, and the Scriptures will harmonize." "Distinguish the periods," and here comes the very point—the period. The Jew had fastened his attention so on one portion of the prophecies, that he saw but one period—the glorious period of the Messiah's reign; and the Christian Church had for centuries so fixed its attention on part of the prophecies only, that it saw but one period—the coming of the Messiah to be crucified. Jewish prejudices arose from partial attention to the prophecies, and christian prejudice has arisen from partial attention to the prophecies. It should be our privilege to distinguish the periods; and while we maintain, as christians, the literal fulfillment of Isaiah's prophecy of the Virgin's Child, and the birth at Bethlehem as foretold by Micah, and therefore that the Messiah has come, we ought to maintain also, with the Jews, the literal interpretation of Isaiah's prophecy, that the Messiah shall reign at Jerusalem, and the prophecy of Micah, that Jerusalem shall be chief of the nations, and therein to believe with the Jews that the Messiah shall come.

He has come, and he shall come. Surely this was the real nature and genius of what the angels said to the disciples, as you may read in the first chapter of the Acts of the Apostles. The disciples, in astonishment, saw their Divine Master carried up into the air from them, and disappearing in the clouds; and while they were looking up in amazement, two angels appeared, and said, "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven?" What was the cause? Have you ever asked yourselves what was the cause of the amazing astonishment of the disciples? Not the mere physical miracle—they were too much accustomed to the physical miracles of their Master to be surprised at that merely, and to make us suppose that to have been the cause of their astonishment. How does what the angels said afterwards address itself to that? "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus whom ye have seen go, shall so come." Was that calculated to abate their astonishment at the miracle which had taken place?—nay, but it was to assert another miracle. How, then, shall we interpret the incident? What was the basis and ground of their astonishment? Why, sir, I think it very plain and instructive.

They had learned unmistakeably that Jesus was the Messiah; they were present when they heard Peter's confession, and the remarkable approbation which was expressed of it by the Lord Jesus: they knew then that he was the Messiah, the one that was to come, and they expected great things for their nation; they knew that a number of the prophecies, still unfulfilled, were connected with the Messiah's name; they were looking for them, and when he was taken from them and put to death, their expectations were dashed to the ground. When, however, they saw him after the resurrection, their expectations revived, and they said, "Wilt thou at this time restore the kingdom to Israel?"—will you finish it all now? And when he had given them an answer, not, indeed, to reject their idea that the kingdom would be restored, but only to tell them the time was not for them to know—when he had done this, he was suddenly taken up from among them, and they were left in amazement.

What were they ready to say within their own minds and hearts?—"After all is He not the Messiah? Is it possible that we were wrong? And if he be, how can he have gone away, leaving so much undone that was predicted of the Messiah? He has done enough to assure us that he is the Messiah. He has fulfilled some prophecies—at his word the deaf man heard; at his word the tongue of the dumb man sang; at his word the lame leaped for joy; at his word the dead has come to life. He must be the Messiah, and yet he is gone; no kingdom restored to Israel! no reigning at Jerusalem!" There was ground for astonishment, and in that state of astonishment the angels addressed them—"Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven?" as if he had left undone what had been promised. Do not imagine that all is to be done at one time. "Distinguish the periods." He is gone, it is true, but he is not gone for ever. That same Jesus whom you have seen go, "shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Then is the time of the fulfillment of the prophecies.

I do not know whether I ever told you of a conversation I overheard some years ago, between a clergyman of the Church of England and a Jew, in the vestry of a Church in London. I had been preaching on Jewish prophecies, and giving to the congregation, as plainly as I could, what I have been now endeavoring to convey to your minds; and to the vestry, after the service, two Jews came, to express their gratification for what they had heard, and their willingness to hear from me more about Jesus of Nazareth, and to invite me to go the next morning to breakfast with them. They were willing to hear more. Well, I referred them to the clergyman who came in at the same moment—and he was a man of some mark in our church too. He had come into the vestry-room, holding the back of his hands towards me, and said, "How can you preach such nonsense?" "Well now," I said, "if you will allow me, while changing my dress, I will refer you to these Jewish gentlemen to converse;" and they very soon got into the thick of the argument. The Jew said to him, "Oh! upon that sort of interpretation, sir, I deny that a virgin ever had a son." "Oh! but," said the clergyman, we know that it is true." "How do you know it?" "It is said in the Bible." "Well," said the Jew, "what more is said in the Bible—He shall reign upon the throne of his father David,—is not that in the Bible?" "Yes." "Well, is not that what the gentleman has been telling us, and you don't believe it? You call it nonsense. Now, if you deny that, I deny the other." "Well," said the clergyman, "but we know that the prophecy of the birth of Christ of a virgin is true, because it is a matter of fact." Sir, I shall never forget the Jew's face—he looked at him with such a withering sneer." "Ay," said he, "you believe because it is done; we believe because God has said."—Dr. Hugh McNeil.

For the Church in Sandisfield.

I would say to the preaching brethren, there is in this place a small company of that class who are seeking for glory, honor and immortality, by patient continuance in well doing. In connection with these are those who love the truth, who are in the habit of attending our meetings. They have not got the truth quite down into the heart yet, but contend for it earnestly, and I rejoice in that, but would like to see them in a position which would cause the angels to rejoice. We have generally a good and attentive congregation, and those preachers whose delight it is to sow the good seed will be gladly received by the brethren, and aided as far as possible.

Lest some may consider me in the way of their coming to this place, I would say that I am not confined to the church here, though I live here, and feel a special interest for the people; the door is open for any of God's servants who may be directed hither. We have a good spacious room to meet in, once occupied by the Methodists, who were dropped from the conference because they could not pay a Methodist preacher's salary; but, thank God, the most of them have received the truth, and look to the Great Shepherd for counsel instead of hirelings, and are looking for his appearing with joyful expectation. May God send them preachers that will give them meat in due season.

Pencilings by the Way.

Saturday, Oct. 27th, left Exeter, N. H., at five o'clock, en route for Canada East. Went to Portland and spent the Sabbath. Their spacious hall was well filled with attentive hearers. In the morning we listened to a discourse from Bro. O. R. F.——, on the duty of prayer. In the afternoon I endeavored to show from the word of the Lord that Adam by transgression lost all that God gave him—Jesus Christ, the second Adam, will restore all that the first lost, in the resurrection; yea, more. We thought that if proper labor could be bestowed, good and great would be the result. The Lord send them help.

Monday, 27th, at half past one took seat in the cars. Passed the White Mountains, whose tops were covered with snow. Twelve at night found myself in Compton, my native town, two hundred miles from Portland. O! how gloomy and sad my heart as I drew nigh the house where I was born, where I spent my childhood, where I was converted, and where, thirty-two years ago, I took the parting hand of my honored parents, kindred, friends and neighbors, to preach salvation to the lost. Nearly or quite all that then lived have passed away. Father, mother and two sisters, I trust, have fallen asleep in Christ, to rest till the resurrection morn, and then in the Savior's image rise. Great changes, indeed, have taken place in this land.

Sunday, Nov. 4th, met at the Saunders' school-house according to appointment. Rainy, few out, good attention, some interest to hear. Sunday, 11th, held a meeting in the west part of the town with Bro. Merrill, who labors here a part of the time, is well engaged in the work and held in high esteem by all who know him. Had a good meeting all day. There is great interest to hear on the subject of the blessed hope.

Saturday, 17th, left for Danville. A kind brother gave me the use of his horse and carriage. Rode all day through mud and water. Reached Bro. Porter's at 9 o'clock, evening, where I was cordially greeted by him and his worthy family. Found in them true friendship, and at their house a pilgrim's home. Before Bro. Porter came here there were only a few isolated christians. There is now a large Advent church, well united, walking in gospel order. Spake to them twice on the Sabbath. In the evening had an excellent prayer and conference meeting that was truly refreshing to the weary saints. Twelve witnessed for the Lord. Bro. Grant has been instrumental of great good here. The church and friends were not unmindful of my wants but helped me on after a godly sort, for which I feel under deep obligations to God and them. May the Lord bless and reward them at the resurrection of the just.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, DECEMBER 5, 1860.

My Diary Notes.

November 12th. This evening, I arrived at Bro. Parry's happy home, which had been much saddened by the severe sickness of Fannie, who often entertains our readers with her rich thoughts in prose and verse. We learned that she continued to decline from the time of our last visit, till she was thought to be dying, and weeping loved ones were gathered to witness the last struggles of a faithful christian, who found her hope as an anchor in the trying hour. Her peace was "like a river," and her sky without a cloud to dim the horizon of her mind, as she calmly waited for the hour when she would fall asleep in Jesus.

When all hopes of earthly aid were thus passed, Bro. Mathewson, a servant of God, was called, and desired to follow the instructions in Jas. 5 : 14, 15. With a firm trust in God's word, he obeyed the directions, bowed in humble prayer, trusting in the promise, and was not disappointed. Her strength is being restored, and she feels more than ever resolved to devote it all to the glory of God, who has so signally raised her from a dying bed. It was remarked by a physician who visited her, that he had never known one recover from a sickness like her's; and that medicine, or human aid, would be of no avail.

We shall hope to be favored again soon with the privilege of reading her interesting articles in the columns of our family paper.

Tuesday, Nov. 13th, we commenced meetings at Sandy Hill, in their new meeting-house, which is very pleasant and commodious. The church worshiping therein is an active one, whose efforts are blessed to the good of the people. We learned that one of the Sandy Hill ministers remarked,—"It is the only working church in the place." And yet this same minister, when referring to our preaching, called it "devilism," and made other remarks too vulgar to appear in print. But notwithstanding the strong opposition of the clergy, proud professors and bigoted sectarians, the Lord gave success to our efforts, and several resolved to serve him, and "seek for . . . immortality" "by patient continuance in well doing." The labors of Bro. Mathewson have been much blessed to the good of this people, and the truth is spreading in all directions, causing the faithful souls to rejoice, and arousing bitter resistance from those who do not love the truth. Said a Baptist deacon, who had been known as a worthy christian for years, when speaking in one of our meetings, and referring to his experience since embracing what the minister called "DEVILISM,"—"The past year has been the happiest of my life." He now loves God and the Bible better than ever. We find this to be the uniform result. Why is this so, if it is such a great error? And why do those who oppose us, when they have a chance to hear, or have heard, lose ground in divine life, and love Jesus and his word less than before they commenced their opposition, if this is "devilism?" When we preach against the "mother of harlots," Spiritualism, Swedenborgianism, Shakerism, and every other species of infidelity, we feel blessed of God and approved by his Holy Spirit, with an increase of love for our Savior and his truth; but we should expect and deserve to be lost, should we, with our light, oppose the doctrine of the sleep of the dead, their subsequent literal resurrection, and the final destruction of the wicked. No Bible truths are clearer to our mind than these; and, by the grace of God, we are determined to stand up in their defence, regardless of all the reproachful epithets that men can heap upon us; and in doing so, we receive a very sweet peace from the Lord, which pays us a hundred fold for all the "hard speeches," and cries of "infidel," that are so lavishly showered upon us, while endeavoring to lead men to Christ and a belief in his word. Thank the Lord that we are "counted worthy to suffer shame for his name." The time is at hand when he will appear to vindicate his truth, and take away the reproach of his people.

Castleton.

Knowing the interest that many feel in the prosperity of the church in Castleton, Vt., we will give them some account of its prosperous condition. Their new meeting-house was dedicated last Thursday, Nov. 22d. It is a very pleasant and commodious house, plain, and yet neatly and tastefully finished, affording a very desirable place for the worship of the God of our fathers. Connected with it is a very convenient conference room, well adapted to the wants of a church. The whole presents a very chaste appearance, within and without, that is quite pleasing to the eye of the beholder, and has called forth many remarks of admiration. It is in keeping with the refined taste and noble generosity of Bro. S——, who, with his family, are preparing for a home in the coming kingdom.

The weather was very fine on the day of dedication, and a crowd assembled to listen to an interesting discourse from Bro. S. G. Mathewson, pastor of the church at Sandy Hill. Many went away, who were unable to get in. We felt the approval of the Lord by the presence of his Holy Spirit, causing love, joy, and peace in the hearts of the saints. Bro. M. showed from the Scriptures that the time is coming when the saints will enjoy the Lord's actual presence upon the earth, after it is restored to its happy Eden state.

Brn. J. Parry, Rufus Wendell, M. Batchelor, J. Howell, and J. Couch, were present with us to enjoy the delightful occasion. About one hundred and twenty-five came up from Poultney to participate with us in our joys. The church in Poultney is doing well, and pressing for the kingdom, hoping soon to have their hope consummated.

In the evening, we assembled again to listen to a very instructive and comforting discourse from Bro. Couch, pastor of the church in New Bedford. The results of the two meetings were excellent, and will be long remembered by those who enjoyed them. At the close of the dedication, we asked an intelligent young lady if she would not serve the Lord and go with us to the kingdom? With a bold expression, she answered with an emphatic "NO." We replied, "It will be just as you say," and passed on. After the close of the evening discourse this same lady took us by the hand, and with streaming eyes said, "Won't you pray for me?" She has since given her heart to the Lord, been pardoned, and made happy in his love. Others requested prayers. The cloud of mercy still hangs over Castleton. Praise the Lord for his great work in this place. Truth is still advancing. Let every child of God do all he can to persuade others to get ready for the great day of the Lord, which is now emphatically "at hand."

Demoniacal Teaching.

The "doctrines of devils," or demons, are rapidly spreading through the world, and causing many to "depart from the faith," and give heed to these "seducing spirits." There seem to be but few lovers of truth left; "and for this cause" the "strong delusion" practiced by the "evil angels" is welcomed by so many. Every one who does not really love the truth is a fit subject for their Satanic influence. All those who hold the doctrine of the immortality of the soul are in danger of being led astray by this great delusion; and that danger is continually increasing. The time has fully come when the fabled doctrine of natural immortatality can no longer be entertained in safety by the church.

We are thankful to the Lord that we ever saw the doctrine of the sleep of the dead. But for this, we fear that we should have been swallowed up in the great maelstrom of Spiritualism, that is now engulphing its millions in the whirlpool of infidelity and atheism. So far as we have been able to learn, every spirit that claims to be a departed human spirit, and every Spiritualist, denies that Christ was in any sense the Son of God, that is not applicable to every good man; and that his death had no more to do with our salvation than the death of any martyr. They declare that Christ was not begotten by the Holy Spirit, thus making him the Son of God, but that he was the son of Joseph. By this doctrine we "try the spirits whether they are of God." Every one that pretends to be a departed human spirit, we may know is a lying one, whose purpose is to lead us away from Christ and the truth of the Bible. Let every one who wishes eternal life beware of them as he would of mad dogs and rattlesnakes.

These spirits say:—"We say, as we have said a thousand times before, there is no such thing as sin; no such thing as evil . . . . Now then, if there is sin any where, God made that sin—he is the author of it.'" "The foundation of your religion is fast fading away. Soon we shall find you shaking hands with these new things. This must be so . . . . Jesus of Nazareth, if he were here to-day, would tell you as we tell you."

Says another:—"Every thought, word and deed is of God, and therefore modern Spiritualism is of divine origin . . . . The religion of the heathen is no less divine than is yours. God approved of it as well as yours."

Another spirit, when speaking to the churches says:—"And now that you have opened the doors of your outer temple, lo! strength shall be given you. Truth shall pour in upon you, and the Christ who came to the lowly of earth in preference to the christians, will now walk with you . . . . The church hath lifted the veil herself." It is very evident that the church has prepared the way for Spiritualism, by teaching the doctrine of the immortality of the soul; and she has now so far departed from the Lord as to become an easy prey to other doctrines of demons.

Another spirit says: "Every thing that ever has been, or ever will be is an immutable decree of God . . . . There is not an atom in the universe but will at some time become an immortal spirit . . . . It is vain for man to talk about disobeying the law of God; he can at no time disobey it . . . . Every grain of sand you tread upon to-day shall in time become an immortal soul, endowed with wisdom, . . You may curse the Author of your being. Do you sin? No; you are but casting off the gross in your nature—obeying your God. . . . . The highest archangel was once the lowest spirit on earth."

A spirit who calls himself Thomas Rice, when speaking of some friends, says, "I want to tell those friends that there is no God. I know there is no such gentleman . . . . There is no devil either . . . . Seems to me as though man must be devoid of good sense to believe any thing of the kind."

We would say to the readers, that the foregoing extracts are from spiritual communications to the Banner of Light, a Spiritualists paper which has some twenty-five thousand subscribers.

The Clergy.

Says J. W. Hunnicutt, a preacher of the gospel:—

"We venture the assertion that there is as much ambition among the clergy of this generation, and of this country, to aspire to high offices, and posts of honor and distinction, in their respective churches, as there is among politicians; and that there is as much secret plotting, wire-working, and clerical log-rolling, to work one party out, or keep it down, and to exalt another party to power, as there is among politicians, is a fact which we presume no man of general intelligence will call in question."

Says the Methodist, when speaking of the ball given in New York to the Prince of Wales:—

"Ministers of the gospel of several different denominations, men who ought to be the nearest representatives of the Savior of sinners, were there, as if to give the sanction of Christ's authority to the most mostrous earthly vanity. What now becomes of wholesome christian discipline? What becomes of the line so clearly drawn by Christ between the church and the world? What of his command to deny ourselves of all ungodliness and worldly lust, and live soberly, righteously and godly in this evil world? May the Holy Spirit himself intervene to restore the broken bulwarks of sacred discipline, and to trace again the fading line between the aggressive world and the invaded church."

Such facts may be gathered in abundance at the present time. It is often asked, "Why don't the popular and intelligent ministers see the truth you preach, if it is truth?" We think Jesus answers this question when he says: "How can ye believe, which receive honor one of another, and seek not the honor that cometh from God only?" He who is endeavoring to get honor of men must not expect to see the truth and be sanctified through its influence.

Quarterly Conference.

The brethren in Livermore desire that the next session of the Western Central Quarterly Conference be held in South Livermore, Me., commencing Thursday, Dec., 20th, at 10 o'clock A. M., and continue over the following Sunday. Shall we have a general representation of the cause of Christ, throughout the limits of this conference? We hope to, and that our ministers and other brethren and sisters will come prepared to work for the Lord. We invite our brethren and ministers who can heartily work with us, from every place, to come and work. But we do not intend this invitation to extend to any whose object is to oppose order and church organization, or who seek to intrude upon our liberality with questions of strife, or uncourteous and unkind conduct. We have no place for such. The day of the Lord draweth nigh. Our work is to lead men to Christ, and show them that Jesus is soon coming to give them who obey him eternal life in his everlasting kingdom.

Overcome Evil with Good.

This rule is not in harmony with our nature; yet since it is God's will revealed to us in the Holy Scriptures, that we should overcome evil with good, let us be content to submit with meekness. It is an easy rule to commit to memory. It is a hard rule to commit to practice; but we are willing to acknowledge it to be a perfect guide applicable whenever occasion requires.

While contemplating our ability to abide by this method when necessary, in connexion with God's precious promises to his obedient children, we feel strong; we imagine ourselves to be well qualified to perform our duty acceptably on this point. We defy the opposition wrapped up in our natures to cause us to yield to its influence. We feel that we have committed our way unto the Lord. We can say, "Not my will, but thine, be done." But when the trial comes, our adversary presses us hard to abandon these blessed words because we have been wronged, we have been persecuted. Now having so much to encourage us it really seems strange that there are so many professing christianity apt to prove themselves so unworthy as to leave their post during such trials. What! forgetful that Christ our dear Savior was persecuted, forgetful that vengeance belongeth unto God? "Vengeance is mine, I will repay, saith the Lord." Forgetful of the good example of the archangel, while contending with the devil about the body of Moses, who dared not bring against him a railing accusation but said, "The Lord rebuke thee"? "For this is thankworthy, if a man for conscience toward God endure grief, suffering wrongfully. For what glory is it, if, when ye be buffeted for your faults, ye shall take it patiently? But if when ye do well and suffer for it, ye take it patiently, this is acceptable with God. For even hereunto were ye called; because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye should follow his steps; who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth. Who, when he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatened not; but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously. Who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree, that we, being dead to sins, should live unto righteousness: by whose stripes ye were healed. For ye were as sheep going astray; but are now returned unto the Shepherd and Bishop of your souls." "The God of all grace, who hath called us unto his eternal glory by Christ Jesus, after that ye have suffered awhile, make you perfect, stablish, strengthen and settle you."

Correspondence.

From Irene Finn.

Dear brothers and sisters in Christ, who are looking for the Son of Man from heaven: Praise the Lord for his goodness unto the sons of men. Let us sing his praises continually until he comes to give his reward to his saints and to his servants the prophets. It is good and comely to praise the name of the Lord, and they that wait upon the Lord shall be as Mount Zion that never shall be moved. O! let us give him the honor due to his holy name. Let us live as becometh saints, exhorting one another and so much the more as we see the day approaching.

We must have the Spirit of Christ; for without it we are none of his. Let us live in such a manner that we may have an abundant entrance into his everlasting kingdom, to go no more out forever; where we shall be as the angels in heaven, never to die any more. Let us be faithful until he that is to come shall come and not tarry.

Fleetville, Pa.

From Ellen M. King.

Bro. Grant:—I trust that I am a child of God, and am determined by his grace to serve and obey him faithfully and be able to say at the last as Paul said, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness; which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them that love his appearing." When I see those that are without Christ or God in the world, my heart is pained within me. Jesus says all those that will come unto him he will in no wise cast out. What words! how full of compassion and tenderness! To sinners he says "Come"! Come, while it is an accepted time and a day of salvation.

I thank God too, that his blessed word is given to us whereby we may be saved. What precious invitations are therein given for us, if we will but come and accept of offered mercy through him who loved us and hung on the cross for our sins, and not for ours only but for the sins of the whole world. I long to see him as he is. How sweet does the name of Jesus sound in my ear. He is the Prince of peace. Precious Jesus, come quickly!

"Why do we say, 'Thy kingdom come?'
Because our King is far away,
And till he comes to us again,
We'll wait, and watch, and pray."

Plainfield, Mass.

From M. J. Achorn.

Bro. Grant:—I write in behalf of my sister in Christ, Irene Achorn, who is prostrated on a bed of pain and suffering. Those brethren and sisters who knew her in '54 know her worth. Being a firm believer in the coming of the Lord at that time, she made a full surrender of herself and all she had to Christ, and has remained firm in faith that the Lord is at hand; but the cares of life have crippled her energies, and she feels that she has cast away her confidence, that her light has been too much under a bushel. Her faith has been that she should live to see the coming of the Lord in the flesh, but except the Lord raise her up she will soon go down to the grave. It is her wish that the church should make her a special subject of prayer that the Lord would heal her, that she may be permitted to meet again in the house where God is worshiped, and likewise that her husband may be converted to the Lord. She has felt to hope that some brother in the providence of God might call at our place, but it is not so ordered as yet. We are four in number who believe in the coming of the Lord at hand; three only look for him in this generation.

I would state that the Lord has heard the prayers of his children in behalf of my son in California; he is recovering, his back is gaining strength so that with the help of crutches he walks abroad,—believes he will be able to come home in the spring with safety. I still desire an interest in the prayers of my brethren and sisters in Christ that he may be raised to health to return home, and that his sickness and loss may be sanctified to his future good. Yours hoping to meet God's dear children in the land where pain and death can never come.

From S. C. Raymond.

Bro. Grant:—Our beloved Bro. and Sr. Mansfield have been laboring with us again, filling their appointments as published in the Crisis. Their labors here have been abundantly blest. The meeting in Hancock County was at a very unfavorable time. It was the week of their County Fair and of great political excitement, together with the heaviest fall of rain there had been for nearly a year. Notwithstanding all the disappointments, we had a good meeting. The brethren were edified, encouraged and strengthened. Sister Mansfield was quite sick and only able to preach once, consequently Brn. Mansfield and Chandler preached the word, after which we partook of the emblems of the broken body and blood of our Savior.

They visited Ripley, in Brown Co., according to appointment, meeting commencing on Wednesday and holding over the Sabbath. Had fine weather, large congregations and good attention. The tent was pitched in the square in the centre of the town. There was a good state of feeling among the brethren and throughout the congregation. Six were baptized. Bro. Chandler remained a few days at Ripley and preached. Bro. and Sr. M. came to our place (Mt. Pleasant) and commenced meeting on Wednesday, and continued over the following Lord's day. We had a blessed time. Our hearts truly burned within us as we communed with each other and the Savior by the way. We had the largest assembly on the Sabbath that was ever in our place. The word preached had a good effect being accompanied by the Spirit. Five followed Christ in baptism, and are now rejoicing in hope. We have a church here numbering over fifty members and in a prosperous condition, considering the many disadvantages under which we labor. We still feel the effects of the hard times that have prevailed here for several years in Central Illinois, owing to the loss of crops. Bro. Scott preaches for us once a month, and occasionally we have had Brn. Pratt and Chandler. But now Bro. P. is East, and Bro C. has made arrangements to go to Wisconsin, so we shall be left almost alone.

There never has been a time since I have been in the West, which is now twenty years, when as much good could be accomplished as at the present. There is more inquiry after tracts. Prejudice is giving away. Denominational feeling is not as bitter as heretofore. To me there never was a time when the church was called to make such extra efforts and self denial as at the present time. We can already hear the rumbling of Christ's chariot wheels, and soon we shall see the King in his beauty.

Bro. and Sr. Mansfield left our place on Monday night for Warren County, and commenced their meeting on Wednesday and continued over Lord's day. Had a profitable and interesting season. There is a church of good, lively members, and in a prosperous condition. The meeting resulted in much good. There were several additions to the church. Bro. Chandler has been laboring here the last year and his labor has been blest.

We need more preachers in the West, good, judicious workmen, who have the cause of God at heart, who will labor to get men and women ready for the judgment. There is no time now to speculate on theories. The fields truly are white for harvest, but the laborers few.

Mt. Sterling, Ill.

From Sr. A. Mussey

Dear Crisis:—The last time I wrote you, it was many months ago in the midnight hour, while watching with a sick brother (now sleeping in Jesus)—peace to his slumbers—and after so long silence perhaps your readers would like to hear a word from me. I am alive and awake, thank God, but am of but little consequence, and can do but little, yet I count one in the church of Christ, and my Master bids me occupy till he comes. I am happy to converse with the church a few moments this morning. Would to God I could meet you all face to face on the fair banks of deliverance, where we could praise God forever and never have to part again. But patience says, wait a little longer; we'll soon be gathered home.

Our work; what is it? 2 Cor. 6 : 1.—"We then as workers together with him, beseech you also that ye receive not the grace of God in vain. For he saith, I have heard thee in a time accepted, and in the day of salvation have I succored thee."

And who are "we"? The church of Christ. Who is "him"? God. So then the church (and ministry of course) are to work together. We work out what the Lord works in, both to will and to do of his own good pleasure, not "forsaking the assembling of yourselves together as the manner of some is, but exhorting one another and so much the more as ye see the day ap-preaching." We all have our proper place in the church of Christ, our work according to our several ability, to occupy till the Master comes to reckon with his servants; and happy will those servants be who have been faithful over that committed to their trust. O! what rapture will fill the soul of those faithful servants when they hear it said unto them, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things. Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." Let me enter through those pearly gates, and walk those golden streets and pluck the fruit from life's fair tree.

"Thrice hail! happy day!"

If I am thankful for anything in this world, it is that Christ has given me a place in his church to labor, and although I have been an unprofitable servant, yet I hope it may be said of me, "She hath done what she could." And let me ask you, my dear brethren and sisters, do you see the day of redemption approaching? Do you see signs of Christ's appearing? Is it almost morning? Yes, oh yes;

"Signs there's no mistaking, Proclaim Messiah near."

Then your duty is plain before you in exhorting one another, and so much the more as you see the day approaching.

But say some of you, I would if I felt as I used to, but I am almost discouraged; the times are so perilous I cannot keep above the influence by which I am surrounded, and I have neglected my duty and got into the dark, lost my enjoyment, and am afraid my lamp is going out. I see signs of Christ's coming every day; signs thicken around me, but the ministers don't preach it as they used to, and I feel so sad, and dissatisfied with my present enjoyment, that I am ready to cry out from the bitterness of my soul,—O that it were with me as it once was!

Brother, sister, whoever you are that feel like this, lift up your heads and look up for your redemption draweth nigh. Do not let your lamps go out. Methinks the voice of the prophets is speaking for the last time, and I love the sound. It is almost morning. The old charnel house will soon be stirred, and our friends will awake who sleep in Jesus, and we shall have a shout on the blest immortal shore. Arise! then, trim your lamps anew, prove the Lord again, he is the same; he will bless you in obedience and make you happy in his love. although wickedness abounds and the love of many is waxing cold, he that endures to the end the same shall be saved by grace.

From S. E. Teeple.

Bro. Grant:—I am still loving the blessed hope of the gospel, and long to reach the land where the inhabitants will not say, "I am sick." We are nearing the shore; let the winds blow, the Captain will guide the ship; the company, I love better than ever. How glad I am I ever enlisted. God grant I may ever keep on board, for such will reach the shore and gain the prize. Children, it is time we all awake, and are up on deck, so that we may see and know where we are on the ocean of time, and also to behold the land, as we are almost there. Signs there is no mistaking, proclaim Messiah near. I am glad, for I sigh for rest. I am weary of wandering round and round, and often cry, when will he come? Echo answers, very soon. Then the Master will wipe the tears from our eyes; he will gird himself and serve us, and bless us forever.

"Then we will watch, and we'll pray,
As our vessel bears away,
And we ne'er will be disheartened any more;
For the port is getting nearer, and I hear the Leader say,
We soon shall reach the harbor and the shore."

Be faithful, children, be watchful, be prayerful be obedient to all the requirements laid down in the word of God, and when the kingdom comes that is to be set up under the whole heaven, you may be there and have right to the city, and eat of the tree of life. Glory to God forever. Amen.

Roxbury, Ct.

From Chas. I. Deyo.

Bro. Grant:—In the winter of 1859 on the 29th of December, God, for Christ's sake spoke peace to my soul, and I became an heir to that inheritance that fadeth not away. I experienced religion under the labors of the Wesleyan Methodist church and united with that church, not because I believed in its doctrines, but because I had nowhere else to go. Shortly after I united with the church, I received a letter from a brother in Iowa (I S. Deyo), writing mostly on the subject of the immortality of the soul, saying he did not believe it was immortal but that the whole man died and laid in the grave until the resurrection. I thought it absurd. What! that never-dying soul of man lie in the grave until the resurrection? Nonsense! I thought to preach any such trash as that was foolishness indeed; so I began to look into the matter a little. I took Lee's Theology and read what he says on the subject. So I took his arguments and answered my brother's letter. I thought I had done away with his doctrine entirely by quoting—"To-day shalt thou be with me," etc., (I did not read the verse before it); also, the parable of the rich man and Lazarus, but to no effect. The next letter that came had some stronger arguments still, such as this verse—"And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." I could not dodge this, but, thought I, it will never do to give it up so. I will try again. So I got together all the old scraps I could find against the doctrine, and began to fight the truth.

About this time I felt God had called me to preach his everlasting gospel, and I was brought before the Quarterly Conference for license to exhort. They began to examine me. They found I was not sound in the faith, because I could not swallow the Trinity. I withdrew from the Conference, and also left the church; therefore I became a free man and began to search for truth. My brother sent me a number of tracts published by H. L. Hastings. I took the "Scripture Searchers" and the Bible and began to read. In a little while I could exclaim with doubting Thomas, "My Lord, and my God!" I now intend to search for truth as long as I live, that I may be a workman that needeth not to be ashamed.

Richland, Mich.

Obituary Notices.

Died, in Bellingham, Mass., Sept. 3d, 1860, of consumption, Miss Lucy M. Paine, only daughter of John O. and Rosalie Paine, of Providence, R. I., aged twenty-four years, five months, four days.

She was a most affectionate, obedient and sympathetic child. Her parents mourn her loss in a time when she would have been the solace of her bereaved and afflicted mother, who has lately been deprived of the use of some of her limbs, and within a few years buried her only son. Bro. and Sr. Paine are now childless, but they sorrow in hope, believing that she that now sleeps will meet them in the land of the living. Lucy was a comfort to her mother, ever ready to minister to her according to her ability. She was aware that she could not live, and she said to her mother, "we shall not long continue in each other's company." She was composed in her mind, and the day before she died she remarked, "O how happy I am." She requested the doctor to tell her what he thought, saying, "I am prepared, you will not alarm me." She requested her father to obtain some one to attend her funeral that would make prominent the subject of the resurrection from the dead; "for," said she, "my hope is centered there." She believed the dead were unconscious; "but," said she, "the trumpet will sound, the dead will arise, and I shall be there."

Though father and mother could not save
Her mortal body from the grave;
Yet while they shed their bitter tears,
She only sleeps till Christ appears.

Bro. J. D. Brown was present and made some appropriate remarks. J. T. Sweet.

Our dear Bro. William Currier fell asleep in Jesus in Portsmouth, N. H., Sept. 25th, 1860, aged forty-three years.

It was the direful disease so prevalent in the New England States—consumption—that carried our brother to the land of the dead. He embraced the doctrine of a literal, personal and speedy advent of our Lord at an early date of the Advent movement, and also its kindred doctrines. It was more than his meet to tell them to all, friends and foes, and confirm them by, thus saith the Lord. He strongly desired to live to see Jesus come in the clouds of heaven, yet was submissive, having no fear of death. He was formerly inclined to, if not confirmed in, the faith of universal salvation of all men, until he heard the proclamation—"Behold he cometh!" He was a strong believer in life only through Christ, and that all of the wicked would God destroy. He wanted all to understand that he expected to sleep quietly in Jesus, under the covenant of life, until the Lord who is our life shall appear, and then with all the saints awake to appear with him in glory.

I had the privilege of visiting him every few days for some three months before his death, and it was truly a feast to hear him talk about the coming kingdom and other Bible truths—a good theological school. I cannot express his state of mind better than one has in poetry in other days:

"Brother, thou wast mild and lovely,
Gentle as the summer breeze,
Pleasant as the air of evening,
When it floats among the trees."

The following verses will speak the sentiment of the living:

"Dearest brother, thou hast left us,
Here thy loss we deeply feel;
But 'tis death that hath bereft us,
Yet our God can sorrows heal.

Yet ere long we hope to meet thee,
When our Lord, our life, shall come,
Then in Eden we will greet thee,
In that glorious, heavenly home."

He has left an affectionate and devoted wife and one son, with other friends, to mourn his loss. May this deep affliction be sanctified to them, and the words of our brother ever live in their minds; "Let the Lord be glorified"—also, "Weep not for me. My blessed Savior will take good care of me." May we all heed our brother's warnings and be found prepared to meet him in the resurrection morning. The writer attended the funeral.

W. Pratt.

Died, at Lakeport, Madison Co., N. Y., Oct. 12th, Douglass, the only son of H. H. and Sarah Bushnell, aged six years and ten months.

Our dear Bro. and Sr. have been called to mourn the loss of one around which many fond hopes clustered. And none but a parent's heart can feel so keenly the loss of one so vigorous and so lovely, cut down in the morning of life. The writer was called and found truly that pilgrim's home where he had been so often greeted with welcome by warm hearts, a house of mourning. And he was led to cry out—

"How long shall death the tyrant reign?"

On the following Sunday the writer administered the balm of life to those wounded hearts, in the presence of a large and sympathizing congregation from I Thess. 4: 14, and the bereaved ones found the words of Paul to be words of comfort.

But in this hour of sadness with the prevailing element of their natures (the love of life) stirred to its very depths at the loss of one so lovely, they had scarcely reached their quiet home before they were called to surround the bed of Fannie, the youngest of the two remaining children, aged about four years and three months, to witness her struggles in that hour when death seemed to say, I am not to be conquered. They stood by her bed night and day, doing all that nature could to beat back the enemy, but all to no avail. On the Wednesday following the death of her brother, she called all the family circle around her dying couch, and kissed them, and then asked her mother to sing

"There is rest for the weary."

after which she calmly fell asleep in Jesus. The writer was again sent for, and as he entered the house, it seemed as if Jesus had been there to calm the troubled sea, and what but the grace of God could prepare a mother's heart to sing to her dying child, as did Sr. B. Friday found us again amidst a large congregation speaking the word of life. May the blessing of God rest upon the afflicted, and this bereavement work for them a "far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." C. B Turner.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

[From Liverpool the 13th ult.]

FRANCE.

The report is revived that M. Thouvenal is likely to leave the ministry of Foreign Affairs shortly.

The formation of a squadron of reserve, to be ready in the spring, is positively announced. In future each transport is to have a steel lighter, which can be taken to pieces, and will be able to land 800 men, a rifle four-pounder, ammunition carts, and six horse and twelve men.

Detachments of troops were being despatched every day by the Lyons Railway to Marseilles. These troops are to proceed to Rome, to complete the war battalions of the regiments stationed there.

It was stated authoritatively in Paris that all men on unlimited leave of absence had received orders to remain in the localities where they are registered, so that, if wanted, they may be called upon at the earliest moment.

The Minister of the Interior had addressed a circular to all the prefects, which, after stating that the government did not prohibit the Pontifical, nor the collection of Peter's Pence, states that, notwithstanding, it cannot admit the unauthorized establishment of permanent committees for collecting subscriptions for a foreign government; and those which have already been formed are to be dissolved, or they will be subjected to equal penalties. The offerings of individuals can be freely given as heretofore.

The Moniteur of the Fleet states that a new iron-plated frigate is about to be laid down on an improved model, with gun deck higher from the water, and lines firmer than the Gloire. Another iron-clad frigate, built on the same lines as the Gloire, is to be launched in February from Maurillon, near Toulon. Two large steam frigates are also being actively completed.

ITALY.

Dispatches from Naples state that the Piedmontese were vigorously pushing on the siege of Gaeta.

It is said that the representatives of France and England, at the Court of Gaeta, have recommended Francis II. to abandon the contest.

On Garibaldi taking his departure for the island of Caprera, he was overwhelmed with the most striking demonstrations from the king, the staff, the officers and the array in general.

The Papal Government has everywhere denied the reports that the Pope will leave Rome. Gen. Lamoriciere had quitted Rome on ten months leave of absence.

Until the convocation of the great Italian Parliament, which is expected to take place in January, the affairs of the two Sicilies are to be administered by Governors General, who will exercise dictatorial powers. Farini is to be Governor of the Neapolitan Kingdom, and Montezemole of Sicily. Cordova goes out as Minister for the Finances in Sicily; La Farini as Home Minister and Minister of Public Security or of the Potice. Father Lanza is appointed Minister of Public Instruction, and M. Pisani of Public Works. These appointments are looked upon by some persons as "if meant to embitter the last moments of Garibaldi's dictatorship by a parting insult"—the most prominent of the individuals appointed being Garibaldi's personal enemies.

On Sunday, the 4th inst., Garibaldi distributed medals to the soldiers who accompanied him in the first expedition to Sicily. The proceedings took place in the Grand Square of Naples, which on three sides was lined with troops, and a small number of distinguished ladies was present. The scene was a highly interesting one, and in particular instances very affecting. The Duchess Verdura pinned the medals to the soldiers' breasts. She is a Sicilian, and the medals were presented by the municipality of Palermo.

Trustworthy accounts represent that the reception of King Victor Emmanuel, as he proceeded along the Neapolitan provinces, was enthusiastic in the extreme. But it was not alone the voice of joy and exultation which greeted the soldier-king throughout his progress. As he rode into Isernia, smoking ruins, a population still terror stricken from the excesses committed by the Bourbon troops flying before Cialdini, met his gaze, and he was surrounded by crowds who clamored for revenge.

The following is the text of King Victor Emmanuel's proclamation on entering Naples:

"To the Neapolitan and Sicilian people:—Universal suffrage gives me the sovereign power over these noble provinces. I accept this solemn decree of the national will, not from any ambition to reign, but from the consciousness of being an Italian. My duties increase with those of all Italians. More than ever a serious accord and a constant abnegation have become necessary. All parties must bow with devotedness before the majesty of Italy, which God has rescued. Here we must establish a government guaranteeing a life of freedom to the people, and strict honesty of purpose in the face of public opinion. I rely upon the efficacious co-operation of all honest men. Wherever the law imposes a curb on power and secures liberty, the government can do as much for the public good as the people for virtue. We must prove to Europe that, if the irresistible force of events has conquered the treaties established for the secular thraldom of Italy, we know how to restore among the united nation the empire of those immutable principles, without which every nation is diseased, and every authority meeting with opposition is unstable.

Victor Emmanuel."

Rome, Nov. 10. It is announced that not less than 30,000 men of the Neapolitan army entered the Pontifical territory in order to remain faithful to their King. The Pope has directed that they shall be supplied with food and lodging, and that the expense shall be paid out of the limited resources left at his disposal. The local municipalities have generously aided the Holy Father in the matter.

[Advices of the 15th ult.]

It was asserted at Rome that the Emperor of Austria had requested the Pope to receive 7000 additional troops.

From the official dispatches received in Paris we learn that the Roman Government is terribly puzzled to know what to do with the Neapolitans who took refuge in the Pontiff's dominions. It costs nothing to disarm 20,000 men; but how are they going to be fed? Cardinal Antonelli has written to Gaeta for funds to support the royal forces, and if not sent, the troops will be ordered to retire from the territory of his Holiness.

It appears that, contrary to the report which has been set afloat, King Victor Emmanuel made repeated and energetic efforts to induce Garibaldi to abandon his intention of retiring, but that nothing could shake his resolution. The rank of Great Admiral and General of the army was offered to him, the latter to serve instead of the title of "Marshal of Italy" until this dignity shall have been appointed. Garibaldi's departure will, it is generally believed, cause the dissolution of the volunteer force. In fact, the Garibaldian army now exists only in name, for the Sardinian Minister of War has issued a notice to the effect that all who wish to continue their service must enter the regular army.

[Per Arabia from Liverpool the 18th.]

ITALY.

No movement of importance was reported.

It was stated that a conspiracy had been discovered against Francis Second, at Gaeta, and two officers and two men had been shot.

The official from the Piedmontese Gazette of the 15th says the Neapolitan General Sabreano proposed to Gen. Fanti a surrender of the Neapolitan troops who remained outside of Gaeta, consisting of ten battalions of Chasseurs and a regiment of Calvary. Fanti rejected the proposition, and after a combat on the 12th, the Bourbon troops re-entered Gaeta, and the Sardinians took up fresh positions around the town. The garrison at Gaeta consisted of 18 battalions, but the dispatch announces that two merchant steamers, carrying French colors, had left Gaeta with troops, supposed to be destined for Civita Vecchia.

Victor Emmanuel had probibited the destruction of Fort St. Alms.

Garibaldi has been appointed a General of the army.

AUSTRIA.

An attempt had been made to introduce arms into Hungary. English vessels were engaged in the enterprise.

Preparations for war were being continued at Mantua.

Garibaldi's Address to his Companions in Arms.—"To my Companions in Arms: We must now consider the period which is just drawing to a conclusion as almost the last stage of our national resurrection, and prepare ourselves to finish worthily the marvelous design of the elect of twenty generations, the completion of which Providence has reserved for this fortunate age.

Yes, young men! Italy owes to you an undertaking which has merited the applause of the universe. You have conquered, and you will conquer still, because you are prepared for the tactics that decide the fate of battles. You are not unworthy of men who entered the serried ranks of a Macedonian phalanx, and who contended not in vain with the proud conquerors of Asia. To this wonderful page in our country's history another more glorious still will be added, and the slave shall show at last to his free brethren a sharpened sword, forged from the links of his fetters. To arms, then, all of you! all of you! and the oppressors and the mighty will disappear like dust. You, too, women, cast away all cowards from your embraces; they will give you only cowards for children; and you who are the daughters of the land of beauty must bear children who are noble and brave. Let timid doctrinaires depart from among us to carry their servility and their miserable fears elsewhere. This people is its own master. It wishes to be the brother of other people, but to look on the insolent with a proud glance, not to grovel before them, imploring its own freedom; it will no longer follow in the trail of men whose hearts are foul. No! no! no! Providence has presented Italy with Victor Emmanuel. Every Italian should rally round him. By the side of Victor Emmanuel every quarrel should be forgotten, all rancor disappear.

Once more I repeat my battle cry—'To arms all—all of you.' If March 1861, does not find 1,000,000 of Italians in arms, then alas for liberty, alas for the life of Italy! Ah, no! far be from me a thought which I loathe like poison. The March of 1861, or, if need be February, will find us all at our posts, Italians of Calatafima, Palermo, Ancona, Volturno, Castelfidardo and Isernia, and with us every man of this land who is not a coward or a slave. Let all of us, rallying round the glorious hero of Palestro, give the last blow to the crumbling edifice of tyranny. Receive, then, my gallant young volunteers, at the honored conclusion of ten battles, one word of farewell from me. I utter this word with the deepest affection, and from the very bottom of my heart. To-day I am obliged to retire, but for a few days only. The hour of battle will find me with you again by the side of the champions of Italian liberty. Let those only return to their homes who are called by the imperative duties which they owe to their families, and those who by their glorious wounds have deserved the gratitude of their country. These, indeed, will serve Italy in their homes by their counsel, by the very aspect of the noble wounds which adorn their noble and youthful brows. Apart from these let all others remain to guard our glorious banners. We shall meet again before long to march together to the redemption of our brethren who are still the slaves of the stranger. We shall meet again before long, and march together to new triumphs.

G. Garibaldi."

For the Crisis.

An Acrostic.

Isa. 33: 24.

"The Sun of Righteousness," the "Morning Star,"
Health of the sick will quickly appear;
Earth's stormy night methinks is nearly gone,
In glory bright thy Lord and Savior comes.
No longer shall weary days and wakeful nights,
Hours of keen pain all thoughts of comfort blight.
Around the Tree of Life no ills will gather;
Beside the verdant banks of Life's fair river,
In Paradise, our home of love, forever
Thy sorrows shall cease!
A hand divine shall wipe thy tear-dimmed eye,
No more will sadness veil thy mental sky,
The Lamb shall yield perpetual holy light—
Sunshine eternal dissipate the night.
Happy are they whose feet have sought the road,
And press toward the sacred mount of God.
Life from the dead their guerdon sweet will be,—
Life in that land of immortality.
No more shall Death, the king of terrors, reign;
On the new earth no blighting curse remains—
There is no sickness, sorrow, grief or woe.
Saved from corruption, ye shall never know
Another pang; thine eyes may then explore
Yon glorious fields, and never, never tire:
Immortal lungs will breath out music sweet,
And feet immortal walk the golden street;
'Mid angel bands, amid the ransomed throng,
Soft alleluias swell and roll along!
In harmony innumbered voices join
In "worthy, worthy is the Lamb" to reign
King on the earth forevermore. Amen.

Pownal, Vt. MARY J. MASON.

For the Crisis.

"The Lord is my Shepherd!"

Long years ago I felt a burden resting on my childish heart; I was scarcely old enough to understand fully the reason of the oppressive weight, but I knew I was a sinner in the sight of a righteous God. For a while I strove against the influence of that blessed Spirit that was reproving me of sin, of righteousness, and of a judgment to come, but I found little satisfaction in earthly pleasures. I knew I was "living without God and without hope in the world," and the Holy Spirit whispered, thou art rejecting the Holy One that "poured out his soul unto death" for thy transgressions. My peace and joy were transient. I desired something better, brighter, purer, and more substantial than I had ever found. My conscience condemned me, and the words of God proclaimed, "The soul that sinneth it shall die." My heart was sad and weary, and I longed for release from the burden of guilt; but my mind was dark because I had never opened the door to let the lamp of life shine in, and I asked, how can I be justified before God? How can he pardon my offences and let me live? Then I heard the voice of Jesus saying, "Come to me," "I am the way, the truth and the life." "He that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out." My heart responded,—

"Lo! glad I come, and thou, blest Lamb, Shalt take me to thee whose I am."

With sweet submission I gave him my heart, and I found a light springing up within me, making the dark places bright, and joy, such as angels never knew, was mine. It was the light of divine love, the joy of sins forgiven! From that glad hour the voice of my heavenly Shepherd has been familiar to my ears, and I have tried to follow him, though sometimes afar off.

When like a wandering sheep I would have sought other pastures, his gently chiding voice has said, "Return unto thy rest," and I was glad to return. He has caused me to feed in the green pastures of his love, and quench my thirst at the well of salvation, the waters of which he says shall spring up within me to everlasting life.

When I am hurt by a careless word, or a poisoned arrow from some malicious hand is purposely aimed at my heart, the smile of friendship is changed to indifference or scorn, and the enemy comes in like a flood filling my mind with harassing doubts and tormenting fears, telling me I am nothing, can do nothing, have never done anything to glorify God or benefit my fellow creatures,—that my life is a failure, and I had better never have seen the light;—in bitter anguish I cry out to Him who never turns a deaf ear to my pleading voice,—his strong arm comes to my rescue,—his tender hand plucks out the sharp arrows, and he says, "Fear not! I am with you," "I will help you." "Fear ye not the reproach of men, neither be ye afraid of their revilings." "I have loved you with an everlasting love." "In me ye shall have peace, in the world ye shall have tribulation; but be of good cheer, I have overcome the world."

When dark clouds come over my mind's sky, and my path seems hedged up around me so that I can see no way out, and the prospect for future time looks dark and forbidding,—the star of earthly hope grows dim and I am "careful and troubled about many things,"—sometimes fretfulness and impatience finds a place in my heart;—but a soft voice whispers, "Come to me!" He dissipates the clouds, and says to the stormy winds, "Peace! be still." He makes the rough places straight, and says, "Take no thought for the tmorrow." "Behold! the fowls of the air, they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns; yet your heavenly Father feedeth them." "And why take ye thought for raiment? consider the lilies of the field how they grow." "If God so clothe the grass of the field, which to-day is, and to-morrow is cast into the oven, will he not much more clothe you, oh, ye of little faith?" "Are not five sparrows sold for a farthing, and not one of them is forgotten before God?" "But the very hairs of your head are numbered." "Fear not, therefore, ye are of more value than many sparrows."

When my body grows weary with the labor and strife of this busy life, and the worn spirit faints, and the heart sinks down in despondency crying, how long, ere I may rest? As the voice of a loving mother, calling to her weary child, come the words of my Shepherd, "Come to me!" By living faith I lean my weary, aching head upon his breast and feel his kindly arm thrown about me, and listen while he tells me of that time when "there shall be no more curse,"—when I shall no longer earn my bread by the sweat of my brow, and never more grow weary or sad. Oh! how his sympathy soothes and strengthens me. With cheerful heart and willing hands I resume my daily toil, knowing that ere long "I shall see him as he is and be made like him,"—from pain and weakness free. He says, if death should claim me for his victim, "Fear not, for I have redeemed thee." "If you fall I will raise you up,"—"I have the keys of hell and of death."

In mercy has he led me alway. Through sunshine and shadow, through dangers seen and unseen, through real trouble and trouble borrowed, the Lord has sustained me, his own arm has upheld me, else I should have fallen in the snare and the pit. I have taken him for my guide, my counsellor, and my confidential friend. I have never sought his face in vain, for he always bids me "come." He has begun a good work in me and I trust he will carry it on unto perfection. In this state of sin I am covered with dross and poorly calculated to reflect perfectly his glorious image, but he says, "I will turn my hand upon thee, and wholly cleanse away thy dross, and take away all thy tin."

As my refiner, lo! he sends
Such trials as are meet
To polish and refine my soul,
And keep me at his feet.

Naturally I am proud and self-willed. I need not wonder then if the wise Master-builder should make use of the axe, the hammer, the saw and the plane, to fit me for his use. Shall I murmur when he reproves or corrects me? Should I not rather draw nearer the hand that holds the rod, and say, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him."

Thou art my shepherd, dearest Lord,
By thy sustaining grace
I'll meekly bear the chastening rod,
Endure the cross, obey the word,
'Till I behold thy face.

Then from our happy home I'll look
O'er life's eventful sea,
And praise thee for each painful stroke,
For every chiding word or look,
That brought me nearer thee.

Answers to Questions by E. H. C.

1. "Where was the garden of Eden?"

It has been supposed that the garden and Eden were identically the same. But we read that "The Lord God planted a garden eastward in Eden. By Eden, the whole earth might have been meant. Somewhere on the earth, called eastward, the Lord planted the garden. The garden was planted in Eden, therefore Eden was there before the garden was planted. If Eden did not include the whole earth, it is evident that it included more of it than was covered by the garden. Our opinion is, that the garden was in that land or territory which was afterwards called Canaan.

2. "Were the sword and tree removed, or are they yet there?"

It has been the opinion of some, that the garden was taken up into heaven after man fell. We think it was not taken up, and the fact that a sword was placed there to prevent man from eating of the tree of life, is evidence that the garden remained. Probably the whole arrangement of the garden remained there until the flood. The deluge so changed the face of the earth as that no trace of anything on the surface remained. So great was the change, that Peter could say, the earth that then was, in contrast with the earth that now is.

3. "Why did God place the flaming sword to guard the tree of life, if it was ever to be removed from the garden?"

The Lord, as we might reasonably suppose, would let the garden remain as it was, that man in his posterity might see what had been lost, and how it had been lost; and that he might be the more readily directed to the seed of the woman, for his recovery from the fall.

The sword was placed there for the one purpose, to prevent man from eating of the tree of life, and thereby becoming an immortal sinner. For if man had become immortal he could not have been saved.

The New Jerusalem above, which is the Paradise of God, will have in it the tree of life. This will take the place, in the Restitution, of the garden which the Lord planted eastward in Eden. Our belief is that this city will occupy the precise locality of the ancient garden, and will be the central point of the second Adam's eternal empire, as the garden would have been for the first Adam had he not sinned.

Stick to the Ship.

Yes! cling to her, for she's bound to the port of perfect peace. You may stand on board and watch other vessels that are paddling for life, but never think of such a thing as entering them. They leak,—are not substantial. The timber is not heavenly ordered. The sailors, the mates, the captain, are not men after God's own heart. Nor are they running in the right channel. The cloudy pillar nor the Eastern star never guide them. The light on board is dim,—the air is not filled with animating power. But the "old ship Zion,"—that's the one to sail on. Come, friend, jump aboard, for we are bound for the port of endless rest.

"Christ is our Pilot-wise,
Our compass is his word;
Our soul each storm defies
While we have such a Lord;
We trust his faithfulness and power
To save us in each trying hour."

For the Crisis.

To the Sisters Scattered Abroad.

When I look around on the world and worldly professors, and by the light of present truth see whither their course is tending; when I see women of talent, who might be the means of doing much good in the world, make themselves the veriest slaves of fashion, and how to keep up with the times seeming to be the main object for which they live; when I consider these things, my heart is made to ache on account of them, and I fear that many of our number who have once given all for Jesus are tending this way. God grant that their eyes may be opened. Dear sisters, let us examine ourselves before God, remembering it is the whole heart God requires. It will do no good to be almost a christian. Pause a moment, as you stand before the mirror, dressed in your fashionable attire. Think you that you reflect the image of Christ? Look again. Do all your ribbons, trimmings, embroideries, and the like, look as if the unconverted could think there is anything in the religion you profess, that purifies the heart? Do they look as if you were willing to be called anything, and suffer anything if thereby you might glorify God? Do they look as if you daily visit your closet, asking God to give you a willing heart to do his entire will? Sisters, we must have courage; we know not what stumbling blocks we are laying in the way of others by indulging in what may seem to us small things. We must be willing to obey God in all things, or our profession will do us no good. We may deceive the church and ourselves, perhaps, but we cannot deceive God. He knows the heart, and if the heart is right, our worse than useless trimmings would drop off. It certainly must be wrong to waste so much time on our clothing; it takes but little time to prepare a plain, modest suit, and then how much less expense, how much more time and money we should have for the service of God. Can you have much time for good works when you waste so much time in trying to dress like the lovers of pride? Sisters, do you love God with all your heart? If so, your love of dress and pride of the heart will all be gone. I entreat you, think of the sufferings of Jesus, when in the garden of Gethsemane, as he sweat as it were great drops of blood. Look at him on the cross, groaning, dying for us. Is any sacrifice we can make too great for such love as this? Then let us throw off the mantle of pride, and seek righteousness and meekness, and then we shall be hid in the day of the Lord's anger.

Let us ask ourselves the question, are we doing all we can for God? Jesus Christ "went about doing good." Have we this evidence of a vital union with him? Are we imitating him? Is the blessing of the poor resting upon us? Are we like him, who wept over perishing sinners, faithfully warning them of the awful consequence of impenitence and unbelief, earnestly entreating them to come unto Jesus Christ for eternal life? Are we pouring out our hearts of love in prayer for their salvation? Alas! my sisters, how insensible we are at times to the obligations of redeeming love. O for a divine power to tread earth's vanities beneath our feet, to fight more ardently the good fight of faith, and lay hold with a firmer grasp on eternal life!

Let us for a while contemplate the manner of Christ's walk while dwelling among men. First, with reference to the treatment of his enemies. "When he was reviled, he reviled not again. When he suffered, he threatened not." He was led as "a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep before her shearers, is dumb so he opened not his mouth." When dying he cried out in behalf of his murderers, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." Here, then, is an example for every disciple. Jesus endured all his sufferings with meekness and patience; and he has said, "Love your enemies: do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that despitefully use you." Jesus gave the highest proof of love to us, in that "while we were enemies he died for us." Let us examine ourselves before God, and see that there is nothing lurking in our hearts unlike our blessed Savior,—strive to be cleansed of all pride, all selfishness, and give ourselves unreservedly to the Lord, and be willing to be used in any way for his glory, not despising the day of small things, take up our cross and follow Jesus, having our ornaments those of a meek and gentle disposition. There is none, however weak, that God is not able to make instrumental in his hands of doing some good, although small we may seem to ourselves. Do not say you have no talent, you can do nothing, and you have so many cares and trials of your own you can do nothing for others. There is no way like forgetting your own sorrows in ministering to others. You may say some kind word to a lonely, sorrowing one, that will be treasured up and comfort the sad heart long after you have forgotten it yourself; even a cup of cold water given in the name of the Lord is remembered by him. Is there a despairing one who will read these lines? I can feel for you. O! turn your eyes away from the perplexing cares, the sinking, drowning trials of life, upward to your heavenly home. Do friends forsake, and enemies revile you? Bear in mind the unspeakable blessedness of a mansion among the blood-washed throng.

"O! 't were sweet to toil in sadness,
O! 't were well the cross to bear,
If, at last, in joy and gladness,
We may rest forever there."

"Many are the afflictions of the righteous; but the Lord delivereth him out of them all." How consoling is this promise to the wounded and afflicted breast. Precious words. And again, "For our light affliction which is but for a moment, worketh out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." Here death has done its afflictive work among us. Our hearts have been rent and torn by its ravages, and we mourn for the loved and dear ones that now lie in the cold, silent grave. Those who were near and dear have fallen by our side. Those who had long cherished an undying love for the cause of God, have finished their work, and to-day their sweet, warning voice is hushed in silence. No more shall we hear their warm exhortations, poured forth from a melting heart and in gushing tears, nor again hear them whisper courage to us amid the pressing discouragements of life. But they will soon awake. The Life Giver is coming. The glorious resurrection morning is near. Those dear sleepers will come forth again, not with mortal bodies to be racked with pain and sickness, and to fade and waste away again in death. No, for an everlasting life will be theirs, and they will bloom forever in immortal beauty in the Paradise of God. Sorrowing one, I pray for grace to be given you to bow to all your afflictions. O! for christian submission to heed the divine injunction—"Be still, and know that I am the Lord;" and with David to say, "It is good for me that I have been afflicted."

Let us, sisters, launch out in the deep waters of God's unbounded love, and walk in the liberty of his dear children. Do you, distrusting one, resolve that from this moment you will obey God in all his known will? You can, for he has said his grace shall be sufficient for you. "I will uphold thee." God's promises are immutable. Does the way look dark? Does self claim indulgence? Does fear distress you? Commit all into the hands of the Lord; thus you will cast your care on him who careth for you. Leave it all with him, give him every care, every burden, yield yourself to obey him. O! how spiritually minded ought we to be, and how closely we ought to walk with God, if we expect soon to reign with him. May God quicken us all, and inspire us with a spirit of watchfulness and prayer that we may be saved with all the blood-washed throng. ANNIE.

Mark 14: 32—35.—"And they came to a place which was named Gethsemane: and he saith to his disciples, Sit ye here while I shall pray. And he taketh with him Peter, and James, and John, and began to be sore amazed, and to be very heavy; and saith unto them, My soul is exceeding sorrowful unto death: tarry ye here and watch. And he went forward a little and fell on the ground, and prayed that, if it were possible the hour might pass from him. And he said, Abba, Father, all things are possible unto thee; take away this cup from me: nevertheless, not what I will, but what thou wilt." Heb. 5: 7.—"Who in the days of his flesh, when he had offered up prayers and supplications with strong crying and tears unto him that was able to save him from death, and was heard in that he feared."

What cup did our Savior desire "might pass from him"? Was it his death on the cross? No, my brethren, for he "was heard in that he feared," and he was not delivered from the death of the cross; but he was delivered from the agony of that "hour" in Gethsemane, which would, it appears, have terminated in death, had not "an angel appeared unto him from heaven, strengthening him."—Luke 22: 43.

It was the immutable purpose of his heart of love to lay down his life for his sheep.—John 10: 15. "For the life of the world";—John 6: 51; "that whosoever believeth in him might not perish, but have everlasting life."—John 3: 16. From this purpose of Jehovah's wise and gracious counsel, the Son of the Blessed never faltered for a moment. When his mistaken disciple objected to its fulfilment, he immediately reproved him, as acting the part of an "adversary," savoring of the things which were of men and not of God. It is not to be supposed that he himself would ever waver in respect to this great purpose of his incarnation.

1 Tim. 6: 14—16.—"That thou keep this commandment without spot, unrebukable, until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ: which in his times he shall shew, who is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings and Lord of lords; who only hath Immortality, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto: whom no man hath seen, nor can see; to whom be honor and power everlasting. Amen." Here is an object to be shown and a person who shall show it. The object to be shown is Jesus Christ. He who "shall show" him is the Father, who is the "blessed and only Potentate," etc. "He (the Father) shall send Jesus Christ," etc.—Acts 3: 20. He alone is the invisible God. Jesus Christ has been seen of many of the human race. He assures us that he lives by the Father, without excepting his divine nature.—John 6: 57. The Father alone (whom our blessed Redeemer assures us, John 17: 1—3, is "the ONLY true God") is possessor of independent immortality. Respectfully submitted. HENRY GREW.

Selections.

The Fire! The Fire!

WHERE IS IT,—OH, WHERE?

The power is not there; the fire is not there;—the flint nor the hammer. "Is not my word like a fire," saith the Lord, "and like a hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces?" "What is the chaff to the wheat?" saith the Lord. Jer. 23: 29.

He preaches well: his sermons are orthodox, strictly Bible in doctrine, above the ordinary; and yet they lack the Spirit's unction, the holy flash, the fire and the hammer of God's word, the keen, two-edged sword of the baptismal. Brother, what's the matter? A worm at the root, —is there? Are you a free man,—free indeed? Have you swung loose entirely from man's wisdom, man's dictation, man-fearing? Is God first, midst, last, always? Do you confer in the least with flesh and blood? Are you cramped in your pulpit ministrations by some wealthy, influential church-member, deacon, elder or class-leader; on whom depends your salary, your parsonage, or your good reputation for strict, cut and dried orthodoxy? Are you afraid lest you offend some novel-reader, some influential rum-seller, tobacco-chewer or smoker, some apologizer of the chattel-system, some one connected, more or less, with lucrative sabbath-breaking establishments? Beloved, break loose from these trammels, these traps of Satan; break loose; cut loose; ere God bind you hand and foot, put out your eyes, as Sampson's. Break loose; swing loose on God; be a free man, whole-souled; preach with power sent down from heaven. Be not trammeled by a man-fearing, time-serving spirit. God of mercy, deliver you from this galling yoke! It is death, double death; it is damnation. We knew a minister thus fearful of coming out boldly against all sin, in thunder-claps,—come life, come death: lest, forsooth, he should lose some of his audience, displease some squeamish, fastidious hunker or doughface. What the result of this man-fearing spirit, this keeping back part of the price, daubing with untempered mortar, prophesying smooth things? The very thing he feared came upon him: God ousted him for his unfaithfulness, cast him out, turned out the false prophet, the "dumb dog." "He that saveth his life shall lose it."

Brother on Zion's top, you gain it tenfold, even in this life, by obeying God implicitly; by breaking loose on the right and on the left; by opening your lips wide for God, for the oppressed; by speaking out boldly, unflinchingly, against slave-holding, rum-selling, tobacco-raising, selling, chewing and smoking; against novel-making, novel-selling, novel-reading: against every popular iniquity. Brother, beloved, strike, strike with your might; spare not the Achans nor the Agags:—strike, keep striking; confer not with flesh nor with Satan. Better lose your office, your parsonage, your salary, your all now; than to lose them forever! Pour in the liquid flame of God's truth against all sin; let it cut like a two-edged sword. Christ says: "Think not that I came to send peace on earth: I came not to send peace, but a sword."

"There is nothing covered that shall not be revealed, and hid, that shall not be known. What I tell you in darkness, that speak ye in light; and what ye hear in the ear, that preach ye upon the house-tops. And fear not them who kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but rather fear him who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell."

"Trust in the Lord and do good; so shalt thou dwell in the land; and verily, thou shalt be fed."

"Must I be carried to the skies
On flowery beds of ease,
While others fought to win the prize,
And sailed through bloody seas?"

—Ex.

The Sliding Scale of Morals.

The standard of right and wrong is eternal in the heavens,—unchangeably one and the same. But here, on earth, it is perpetually variable,—it is one in one age or nation, another in another. Every profession has its conventional morality, current nowhere else. That which is permitted by the peculiar standard of truth acknowledged at the bar, is falsehood among plain men; that which would be reckoned in the army purity and tenderness, would be elsewhere licentiousness and cruelty. Trade has its honesty, which, rightly named, is fraud. And in all these cases, the temptation is to live content with the standard of a man's own profession or society; and this is the real difference between the worldling and the religious man. The one lives below that standard, no higher; the other lives above his age.—Robertson's Sermons.

Hope.

The rays of the star of Hope come to encourage us in our weary pilgrimage, when the trials of life afflict and dishearten. It is then that Hope shines upon us, imparting strength to battle bravely for the palm in the contest of life. In the pleasures of Hope, too, we find our happiest joys. For what heart believes itself happiest to-day? it is ever the vision of the morrow. We never find our chiefest bliss in what we have, or what we are, but in what we hope to have, and in what we expect to be. Hope not only insures a present joy, but, also, induces fervent action; and action is the highest condition of existence. To aspire is, indeed, manly, but to do is godlike. Thus, Hope should be estimated not only for the happiness it imparts, but, also, and especially, for its stimulating virtues. Indeed, to an earnest soul, Hope seems a very inspiration, lending vigor to the will, and sublime force to the action.

Hold on, hold in, hold out.

BY BENJ. SCHMACKE.—BORN 1672.

Hold on, my heart, in thy believing!
The steadfast only win the crown;
He who, when stormy waves are heaving,
Parts with his anchor, shall go down;
But he who Jesus holds, through all
Shall stand, though heaven and earth should fall.

Hold in thy murmurs, Heaven arraigning!
The patient see God's loving face;
Who bear their burdens uncomplaining,
'T is they that win the Father's grace;
He wounds himself who braves the rod,
And sets himself to fight with God.

Hold out! there comes an end to sorrow,
Hope from the dust shall conquering rise;
The storm foretells a summer morrow,
The cross points on to paradise.
The Father reigneth—cease all doubt—
Hold on, my heart, hold in, hold out.

Family Failings.

In many families where both love and good temper prevail there is what may be called an irksome, rather than a sinful mode of carping and contradicting one another. No harm is meant and no offence is taken; but what can be more irksome than to hear two sisters, for instance, continually setting each other right upon trifling points, and differing from each other in opinion for no apparent reason, but from a habit of contradiction? And such a habit does it become, that one may sometimes see persons who have acquired it, contradict their own statements, just made, the moment any one advances the same opinion. It is generally on such trifles that bad habit shows itself, so that it may seem needless to advert to it; but it is a family fault, and should be watched against, for it is an annoyance, though but a petty one, never to be able to open your lips without being harrassed by such contradictions.

The Old Oaken Bucket.

The following reminiscence of Samuel Woodworth possesses sufficient interest, we think, to warrant us in presenting it to our readers. It is a portion of a private letter recently received from one whose authority in the matter cannot be questioned. In reference to the period of the production of the "Old Oaken Bucket," the writer says: "It was written in the spring or summer of 1817. The family were living at the time in Duane street. The poet came home to dinner one very warm day, having walked from his office, somewhere near the foot of Wall street. Being much heated with the exercise, he poured himself out a glass of water—New York pump water—and drank it at a draught, exclaiming, as he replaced the tumbler on the table, 'That is very refreshing, but how much more refreshing would it be to take a good long draught, this warm day, from the old oaken bucket I left hanging in my father's well, at home!' Hearing this, the poet's wife said, 'Selim, why wouldn't that be a pretty subject for a poem?' The poet took the hint, and under the inspiration of the moment, sat down and poured out from his very soul those beautiful lines which have immortalized the name of Woodworth."—Home Journal.

In the Sunshine.

A BEAUTIFUL DIALOGUE.—LITTLE RICHARD AND AUNT PHEBE.

"Speak gently, it is better far
To rule by love than fear;
Speak gently, let not harsh words mar
The good we might do here.
Speak gently to the young, for they
Will have enough to bear;
Pass through this life as best they may,
'T is full of anxious care."

"I wish father would come home," said little Richard.

The voice that said this had a troubled tone, and the face that looked up was sad.

"Your father will be very angry," said aunt Phebe, who was sitting in the room with a book in her hand. The boy raised himself from the sofa, where he had been lying in tears for half an hour, and with a touch of indignation in his voice, answered:

"He'll be sorry, not angry. Father never gets angry."

For a few moments the aunt looked at the boy half curiously, and let her eyes fall again upon the book that was in her hand. The boy laid himself down upon the sofa again, and hid his face from sight.

"That's father, now!" He started up, after the lapse of nearly ten minutes, as the sound of a bell reached his ears, and went to the room door. He stood there for a little while, and then came slowly back, saying with a disappointed air:

"It isn't father. I wonder what keeps him so late. Oh, I wish he would come!"

"You seem anxious to get deeper into trouble," remarked the aunt, who had only been in the house for a week, and who was neither very amiable, nor very sympathising towards children. The boy's fault had provoked her, and she considered him a fit subject for punishment.

"I believe, aunt Phebe, that you'd like to see me whipped" said the boy, a little warmly, "but you won't."

"I must confess," replied aunt Phebe, "that I think a little wholesome discipline of the kind you speak of, would not be out of place. If you were my child, I am very sure you wouldn't escape."

"I'm not your child; I don't want to be. Father's good, and loves me."

"If your father is so good, and loves you so well, you must be a very ungrateful or a very inconsiderate boy. His goodness don't seem to have helped you much."

"Hush, will you!" ejaculated the boy, excited to anger by this unkindness of speech.

"Phebe!" It was the boy's mother who spoke now, for the first time. In an under tone, she added, "You are wrong. Richard is suffering quite enough, and you are doing him harm rather than good."

Again the bell rang, and again the boy left the sofa, and went to the sitting-room door.

"It's father!" and he went gliding down stairs.

"Ah, Richard!" was the kindly greeting, as Mr. Gordon took the hand of his boy. "But what's the matter, my son? You don't look happy."

"Won't you come in here?" And Richard drew his father into the library. Mr. Gordon sat down, still holding Richard's hand.

"You are in trouble, my son. What has happened?"

The eyes of Richard filled with tears as he looked into his father's face. He tried to answer, but his lips quivered. Then he turned away, and opening the door of a cabinet, brought out the fragments of a broken statuette, which had been sent home, only the day before, and set them on a table before his father, over whose countenance came instantly a shadow of regret.

"Who did this, my son?" was asked in an even voice.

"I did it."

"How?"

"I threw the ball in there, once—only once, in forgetfulness."

The poor boy's tones were husky and tremulous.

A little while Mr. Gordon sat, controlling himself, and collecting his disturbed thoughts. Then he said, cheerfully:—

"What is done, Richard, can't be helped. Put the broken pieces away. You have had trouble enough about it, I can see—and reproof enough for your thoughtlessness—so I shall not add a word to increase your pain."

"Oh, father!" And the boy threw his arms about his father's neck. "You are so kind, so good!"

Five minutes later, and Richard entered the sitting-room with his father. Aunt Phebe looked up for two shadowed faces; but did not see them. She was puzzled.

"That was very unfortunate," she said, little while after Mr. Gordon came in. "It was such an exquisite work of art. It is hopelessly ruined."

Richard was leaning against his father when his aunt said this. Mr. Gordon only smiled, and put his arms closely about his boy. Mrs. Gordon threw upon her sister a look of warning, but it was unheeded.

"I think Richard was a very naughty boy."

We have settled all that, Phebe," was the mild but firm answer of Mr. Gordon; "and it is one of our rules to get into the sunshine as quick as possible."

Phebe was rebuked, while Richard looked grateful, and it may be, a little triumphant; for his aunt had borne down upon him rather too hard for a boy's patience to endure.

Into the sunshine as quickly as possible! Oh is not that the better philosophy for our homes?

Is it not true christian philosophy? It is selfishness that grows angry and repels, because a fault has been committed. Let us get the offender into the sunshine as quickly as possible, so that true thought and right feelings may grow vigorous in its warmth. We retain anger, not that anger may act as a wholesome discipline, but because we are unwilling to forgive. Ah, if we were always right with ourselves, we would oftener be right with our children.

"Speak kindly, speak kindly! ye know not the power
Of a kind and gen'le word,
As its tones, in a sad and weary hour,
By the troubled heart are heard.
Speak kindly then, kindly: there's nothing lost
By gentle words; to the heart and ear
Of the sad and lonely, they're dear, how dear,
And they nothing cost."

—Golden Rule.

A GOOD ANSWER.—A young lady in a Sabbath school, a few mornings since, asked her class: How soon a child should give its heart to God? One little girl said: When thirteen years old; another ten; another six. At length the last spoke: "Just as soon as we know who God is." Could there be a better reply?

COME TO JESUS.

Little children, come to Jesus,
He hath for our ransom died;
Fear him not, he came to save us,
He for us was crucified.

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,

Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months	15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for three months for 50 cents, which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of brethren, they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

"A Father of the Fatherless."

Ps. 68: 5.

Great God and wilt thou deign to bless
The lone heart of the fatherless?
Yea, wilt thou claim and call thine own
A child of earth unloved, disowned?

Will Jesus kindly bear the part
Of brother to the stricken heart,
That often yearns and sighs in vain
An earthly brother's love to claim?

O! will the Holy Spirit guide
Such strangers through this world of pride
With words of comfort, cheer, and bless
Them through life's dreary wilderness?

May all such sorrowing ones rejoice,
And upward raise th' imploring voice
To thee, as Father, Brother, Friend,
When clouds arise and storms descend.

And when the last great day is come,
The scattered flock is gathered home,
Oh! wilt thou give thine "own new name,"
And let them in thy kingdom reign?

Will Jesus wipe their tears away
In that eternal, glorious day,
And banish in that land of rest
The rugged "thorn" that tears the flesh?

Yea, thou hast said it in thy book,—
"Thy word is truth;" by faith we look
Beyond these clouds of doubt and fear,
And rest in peace and hope secure.

The promise sure is sealed in blood,
All that are his are known of God;
Without respect to birth or name,
The great and small have equal claim.

Turning the Other Cheek.

The instinct of retaliation in every creature is so manifest that it has given rise to the adage—"Tread on a worm and it will turn." In other words, there is no animal so contemptible or weak which will not offer resistance when pressed or trampled upon. The power of retaliation is widely different, but the principle is the same, whether it be in the majestic lion or the abominable rat. If there be an exception, I think it confined to the genus Ovis; and that too, to the female and the young. The sheep and lamb are used as examples of unresisting endurance; but the head of the family, the ram, is sometimes a very quarrelsome and vicious animal.

With his superior power of doing mischief there is no creature so quick at taking offence, and so eager for inflicting retribution as man. His pride, with its thousand sensitive feelers radiating from his corrupt heart, is ever ready to feel and avenge that which collides with his self-esteem, his interest, or his fame; or in speaking of the lowest degraded order of the race, where neither the former or the latter remains, a murder often is committed when only the brutal passions are excited and are clamorous for blood.

Among christians, even, there is sometimes a lack of forbearance, which taking offence at trifles which were better to have been left unheeded, retorts with open bitterness or covert sarcasm, and opens a wound which no unction but the balm of Gilead can heal; and which need not have existed at all, if the spirit of retaliation had been held in check by the grace of God. It was for the purpose of having this natural proclivity completely under subjection that Christ admonished his disciples, and exemplified his teachings by his own example, that they should bear every wrong and contumely with patience, eschewing all litigation and revenge, bearing their cause to Him to whom vengeance alone belongeth.

The act of smiting on the cheek, or plucking the beard, is considered the greatest indignity. To bear it without instant retaliation, among men, is considered cowardly in the extreme; and nothing but the most abject poltroonery, or the grace of God, can arrest a man's hand in vindication of his outraged honor upon such provocation as that. But the doctrine of christianity, as taught by its divine Founder, insists upon a greater degree of humility than simple non-resistance, even the offering of the other cheek to the smiter.

This is an extreme case, but it shows to what a state of discipline the servant of God can and should be brought. There are comparatively few, in our day and generation, and in the land we live in, who are subjected to stripes and imprisonment for the cause of religion, although scoffs are many, and ridicule, almost as hard to endure as blows. These come from outsiders; but are there not too often, by a great deal, bickerings among ourselves, discussion with personalities, profitless because caustic, and creative only of hard feeling and dissension? In truth there is too much, if any; and we should endeavor to curb that spirit which would hurt a brother's feelings, even when we seek to do him good. A man must not use the scourge of cords as Christ did, unless he be like Christ—sinless. Let the suaviter in modo, go with the fortiter in re,—the brotherly kindness with the uncompromising rebuke.

There are some so combative, that in written argument or oral debate, they cross opinions as they would swords—every sentiment in abeyance but that of annihilating their opponent. I am sorry to say that this feeling is among my own numerous failings, and consequently I endeavor to keep out of discussion as much as possible.

Let each and all of us, then, when we feel it a duty to expose an error or correct a mistake, do it in the spirit of love and forbearance, remembering that we are of one family, and look forward to the time when we shall all assemble around our Father's table on that great day of thanksgiving and eternal praise. Let sympathy and charity prevail, rather pitying and mourning a brother's fall, or his wayward course, kindly counselling and reproving him; and not drag him like a criminal to our individual bar, calling in question his motives and his actions, and pronouncing upon him our own judgment and condemnation. Let our conduct be to each other what that of the early christians was, which wrung from their very executioners the exalted encomium—"Behold how these men love one another!"

For the Crisis.

Josephus' Age of the World:

COMPARED WITH MY OWN COMPUTATIONS FROM CREATION.

Josephus, being the only historian uninspired, who has left behind him the sacred records, I feel a great deference towards his history, and a profound and solemn respect for the man, who has with all candor and faithfulness given us a record of events that have transpired in the world, which it would be impossible for us to obtain elsewhere. In some instances he presents the narrative in a manner plainer to be understood than the sacred texts themselves; not only so, but he leaves no chasm or gap unfilled, either at Joshua, anarchy, Judges or Samuel; nor even at the birth of Christ; but carries the whole history of events and periods in one unbroken chain of years, from the creation of Adam, to the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans. I believe he was a remarkable man, of superior talents and acquirements, especially learned and skillful in the Hebrew language; of quick perception, and generally accurate in his computations; and as far as his records depend on his own authority only, he affirmed what he knew to be facts; and they should be received as the truth, as far as he was concerned; for he professes to give a just translation of their sacred books, without adding to or diminishing from the original copies; which we have no reason to disbelieve.

But his Antiquities contain a great many mistakes and evident omissions which he could not have made himself; and though it is evident that he drew some of his numbers from conflicting histories, this is no reason that all the errors and omissions of translators and copyists of his work since his death, should all be laid to him. His works have gone through hundreds and thousands of hands, and perhaps hundreds of editions; and copyists, translators, editors, and printers, have tumbled them over for nearly two thousand years; and this is sufficient to account for the errors they contain; and though I admit that he made some slight mistakes, yet all the gross errors, I must say, should not be laid to him, but to unseen causes. Josephus copied the Greek numbers of the Patriarchal age; but he adopted those of the Hebrew, in his age of the world. The numbers at the heads of his books are somewhat confused; especially the fifth and sixth books; for it is evident that forty years have been taken from the sixth and added to the fifth; that four hundred and thirty-six, instead of four hundred and seventy-six, should stand at the head of the fifth book; and that this forty years should be added to the thirty-two of the sixth book to make it seventy-two, instead of thirty-two; this the events of each book require. His chronology stands at the head of his books of Antiquities, and [illegible] by [illegible] in the course of his history, [illegible] which will be presented, and whatever agrees with the true years that head the book will be admitted; and whatever grossly disagrees with these years, will be repudiated, or unnoticed, and left as mistakes. That he adopts the Hebrew numbers in his age of the world may be seen in B. 8, C. 3, S. 1. There he says, "From Adam, the first man that was created, until Solomon built the temple, there had passed in all, three thousand, one hundred and two years," which is in accordance with the Hebrew, if any be allowed to Samuel. Again, B. 10, C. 9, S. 5, he says, from the generation of Adam, until this befell the temple, (i. e., when it was burned by Nebuchadnezzar,) there were three thousand, five hundred and thirteen years. By these assertions he repudiates the Greek or Septuagint numbers. Though he copies them in his first book, he never makes any use of them afterwards; and by this rejection, the authority of the numbers of his first book falls to the ground, and there he leaves them ever after.

His first book reaches to the death of Isaac; and in the arrangement of the number of years to the periods of some of the books of Antiquities, there is great want of order, though some of them are right Bible numbers; but they are generally so misplaced and huddled together, that their adjustment is extremely perplexing. Still it is necessary that they should, if possible, be put in some kind of order; and it is probable some, who have laughed at Josephus' chronology, and called it a perfect jumble of years, will be surprised when they see the final result of his numbers, from the beginning of the world to the destruction of their city by Titus.

Book I. gives the same age to the first ten patriarchs at their death, as the Bible; but not the same at the birth of the patriarchal sons. After the flood, their age is not given so accurately; and in the book containing the Greek numbers they all amount to one thousand, five hundred and forty-four years more than the Hebrew, to the death of Isaac. But as Josephus only copied those numbers in his first book, but never made use of them afterwards; it will be as well for me to follow his example, and leave them where he left them, and make use of the Hebrew numbers only, not only from Isaac's death but from the creation. He fixes the anarchy and destruction of the Benjaminites between the death of Joshua and the first servitude under Chusan. To all the Judges but two, and to all the kings of Judah but one, he gives the same numbers as the inspired text. To Joshua he assigns twenty-five years, Ant. 5, 1, 29; to Samuel twelve, Ant. 6, 13, 5. "He went from year to year in circuit to Bethel and Gilgal and Mizpeh, and judged Israel in all those places; and his return was to Ramah, for there was his house, and there he judged Israel." "And when Samuel was old he made his sons judges." "And his sons walked not in his ways but turned aside after lucre, took bribes and perverted judgment." This provoked Israel to ask a king. How long they were suffered to plunder the people, before they became so enraged as to demand a king, we are not informed; but it was probably several years. It is very likely that Samuel here presided over the Israelites twelve years, as Josephus records; and all this was after the death of Eli, and after the ark of God had been returned to its place, by the Philistines, and had been in the house of Abinadab twenty years, and before Saul was anointed king; so that none of these years can possibly be assigned to Saul. We have the inspired text,—"God gave them Saul the son of Cis, a man of the tribe of Benjamin, by the space of forty years."—Acts 13: 21. So that we have the same authority to assign full forty years to Saul, that we can have to David or Solomon.

In examining the Books of Antiquities from the end of the first book to the twentieth, I find but one very serious error as to the years at the heads of the books; and that occurs in the eleventh book between the first of Cyrus and the death of Alexander the Great; which gives an overplus of forty-one years and five months more than enough to fill the period; but we must recollect that there was no B. C. nor A. D. in the time of Josephus, to reckon to or from, and Josephus gave these numbers as he found them in the histories; but they are merely nominal years; i. e., they exist only in name, and not in reality; and this can at once be accounted for when we consider the conflicting statements of different historians, as to the length of the reign of some of the Medo-Persian kings, which will be noticed in due time. Book I. reaches to the death of Isaac; but I shall leave the first book as containing numbers of doubtful authority, and adopt the inspired Hebrew numbers to the epoch of Isaac's death.

To the deluge 1657, to the call of Abraham 427, to the birth of Isaac 25, his age 180,—2289. I shall begin at the above epoch and count up all the years that I find at the heads of all his Books of Antiquities, from the end of the first book to the twentieth; feeling that I am discharging an imperative duty, in defending him from various misrepresentations, by giving a truthful view of the chronology of his history; which perhaps may not be without some interest and profit both, to those who have any taste for the chronology of the world. I shall give all the years from the above epoch to the last book inclusive, but the extra forty-one, and these will be placed in such a position that all can see that they can have no place where they seem to be located; and that they were inserted by mistake, made by computing erroneous numbers to some of the kings of Persia.

We know that the histories from whence Josephus drew numbers of the years of the Medo-Persian kings were not all right, by his giving more years to Xerxes than he ever reigned. On p. 227, Ant. XI, 6, 7, he speaks of "the 25th of Xerxes"; and in the next Sec., after Nehemiah had built the walls of Jerusalem, which took two years and four months, he says, they were built in the 28th year of Xerxes; which is seven years more than he actually reigned; for I know of no one now that assigns to him any more than twenty-one years; and I have often seen in ancient histories forty-nine or fifty years assigned to Artaxerxes, whereas he reigned no more than forty-one years. Here are nine years too many set to Artaxerxes, which in the reigns of these two kings amount to sixteen years more than they reigned. Cyrus also is often said to have reigned thirty years; but he reigned only seven after the end of the Babylonish captivity. Now here are twenty-three years more to be added to the before-mentioned sixteen, which all amount to thirty-nine years, out of the foregoing forty-one, leaving but two years unaccounted for; and it would be no difficult task to find the other two, were we in possession of those ancient histories; and as these nominal years are found in the discordant histories of those times, it leaves the copyist harmless; for he says he gave them as he found them.

It is a mathematical demonstration, that between the first of Cyrus, B. C. 536, and the death of Alexander the Great, B. C. 324, no more than 212 years could ever elapse; and I think it an act of justice to a great and useful man to remove every obstruction from the chronology of his history, so extensively beneficial to mankind; and I think I shall be sustained by every well-informed individual who knows of those conflicting numbers assigned to those kings, and who also know that there is no latitude here for them to exist. In comparing numbers, I shall put the years of several of his books together, as they will harmonize better, and in my own computations I shall assign twelve years to Samuel and forty to Saul. In other respects I shall not materially differ from Bliss' Anal. Sac. Chron.

Book I. closes with the death of Isaac, to which time I feel justified in assigning to Josephus the inspired Hebrew numbers; not because I believe they are right and the Septuagint wrong; but because he himself repudiated the Greek numbers, and adopted the Hebrew repeatedly; as has been shown (and probably will be again in due time), from the creation of Adam for several thousand years, in recording the age of the world; which proves that though he copied the Septuagint, he had no use for it afterwards. I shall therefore set to him the same number of years as to myself at the epoch of Isaac's death; the same which the Hebrew Scriptures give, it being A. M. 2289. I shall give the comparison in a table of two columns. The first will give Josephus' numbers, at the head of his books, as the outline and foundation of his chronology. The second will give my own computations.

CHRONOLOGICAL TABLE.

	His.	Mine.
Inspired Hebrew numbers to the epoch of Isaac's death	2289	2289
Book 2d gives a period of two hundred and twenty years from the death of Isaac to the exodus out of Egypt, which is five less than I make.	220
I make two hundred and twenty-five in this period. How this five years could be removed from this period cannot be accounted for; for Jacob was 120 years old when his father Isaac died, having been born when his father was 60; and when Jacob, at the call of his son Joseph, stood before the king of Egypt, he was 130 years old, which was ten years after Isaac's death; and the sojourn of Jacob and his sons in Egypt was two hundred and fifteen years, to which add the foregoing ten, and we have two hundred and twenty-five years. But these five years are not lost; we shall find them in the course of the account.		225
Books 3d and 4th give a period of forty years in the wilderness. I give this as a Bible number, to the death and mourning for Moses. Here, from the exode, begins Josephus' period of 592 years, to the temple.	40	40
Books 5th and 6th give a period of five hundred and eight years from the death of Moses to the death of Saul	508
As this period assigns twelve years to Samuel, and forty to Saul, I shall adopt the same number.		508
Book 7th gives forty years from the death of Saul to the death of David. As this is an inspired number, I give the same.	40	40
At the fourth year of Solomon, we find Josephus' period fall, of five hundred and ninety-two years current, made up as follows: In the wilderness 40, to the death of Saul 508, to the death of David 40, to the 4th of Solomon 4—592 in all. If we now add the years anterior to the death of Jacob, (2289) and his number between that time and the exode (220), to the 592 years, we have his age of the world at the building of the temple, three thousand one hundred and one years; and though he elsewhere sums it up as 3102, that one year was probably a mistake in casting his figures. My own computations to the temple amount to three thousand one hundred and six; and it will be seen that had he not left out the five years that belong to the period between the death of Isaac and the exode, my numbers would not have exceeded his, for both would have been 3106. But as it is, he only antedates the building of the temple, five years; for we shall overtake these missing years yet.
Books 8th, 9th, 10th, respectively give the following years: 163, 157, 182 1-2—in all five hundred and two and a half years, from the death of David to the first of Cyrus, which is eight and a half more than I make, David died about B. C. 1030; 1st of Cyrus B. C. 536; I make this period but	502 1-2	494
Book 11th contains the dreaded mistake giving the record of two hundred and fifty-three years and five months, between the first of Cyrus and the death of Alexander the Great,—forty-one years too many. The space between the 1st of Cyrus B. C. 536, and the death of Alexander B. C. 324, is two hundred and twelve years. I shall fill it as full as it will hold, and for the reasons already given, leave the forty-one false years out of the amount.	212	212
Books 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, respectively give the following years: 170, 82, 32, 18, 12, 14—in all 328 years from the death of Alexander to the banishment of Archelaus. Alexander died B. C. 324, and Archelaus' dethronement was in A. D. 10. This is six years less than I make.	328
I make the years of this period three hundred and thirty-four.		334
Books 18th, 19th, 20th, respectively give the following years: 32, 3 1-2, 22—in all 57 1-2 from the fall of Archelaus to the first year of Gessius Florus. Florus began his administration as governor of Judea in the year of Nero; and by overbearing mismanagement and violent injustice he drove the Jews to madness, and necessitated them to take up arms against the Romans in his second year; which was the 12th of Nero. Ant B. 20, C. 11, S. 1. Nero lived three years after Florus came into Judea; his whole reign being 14 years. Galba, Otho and Vitellius contended for empire some six or eight months, when Vespasian was proclaimed emperor of Rome, in whose second year, Jerusalem was destroyed.—Jewish Wars, 6, 10, 1. If we add three numbers, 57 1-2, 3, 2, they equal 62 1-2, which is 2 1-2 years more than I make.	62 1-2
The Vulgar era gives A. D. 70 for the date of the destruction of Jerusalem. Archelaus fell A. D. 10,—there remains sixty years.		60
The foregoing table will show the result of Josephus' age of the world from the creation to the fall of the Jewish nation under the Romans. In the period between the death of Isaac and the exode he gives five years less than I do; and also between the death of Alexander and the fall of Archelaus he gives six years less; but this loss is counterbalanced by the gain of a like number of years in other periods; for between the death of David and the first of Cyrus, he gives eight and a half more years than I do; and two and a half years between the fall of Archelaus and the destruction of the city, more than I do; so that the gain is equal to the loss; which leaves them strikingly counterpoised, with eleven years in each scale. I have assigned twelve years to Samuel; and in no other instance have I differed from Bliss' Anal. Sac. Chron. I have given all the years and half years to be found in all his books of Antiquities beyond the first, (with the exception of those forty-one skeleton years, so abundantly shown to be a false estimate,) from the death of Isaac, to which point the inspired Hebrew numbers were attached, to the fall of Jerusalem; and it is a remarkable coincidence that by assigning twelve years to Samuel, my computations are exactly in accordance with those of Josephus. From the creation of the world, we both concur in assigning four thousand, two hundred and two years, as the age of the world when Jerusalem was destroyed.	4202	4202
From which, if we deduct 70, we have four thousand one hundred and thirty-two, for the age of the world at the birth of Christ;	70	70
	4132	4132
and if we add 1860,	1860	1860
we find that we are now living in the five thousand nine hundred and ninety-second year of the world.	5992	5992

This chronology of Josephus I think may, as much as any thing human, be relied on. There is not a gap nor a break in the whole chain from the death of Isaac to the fall of Jerusalem; and we have the inspired Hebrew numbers without a break, up to Isaac's death. There are some slight mistakes, it is true; but nothing that amounts to the weight of a feather as to the result. As I wish to have all see and understand the numbers contained in Josephus' period of five hundred and ninety-two years, between the exode and the temple, I will give a table of the numbers contained in it, with the authority on which each number is based.

It will be seen by the above table that the time of the Elders and anarchy is not a given number, either in the Bible or Josephus; all the given numbers in both amount to 572 years; and as the period twenty years is required to fill the period, we suppose that the time of the Elders that overlived Joshua, and the anarchy that followed their death, to amount to just twenty years. Nor does Josephus give the seven years servitude under Midian, nor Tola's twenty-three, nor Abdon's eight, nor Saul's forty; but it is here shown that all these given numbers of Josephus, together with Joshua's twenty-five, and Samuel's twelve; and all the given numbers in the Bible from the time they left Egypt, till Solomon began to build the temple, in the 4th year of his reign, are all included in this period; and then the twenty for anarchy is required to fill it. And if from Joshua's twenty-five, we deduct six for division of land, we have nineteen years left to Joshua. Then allow twenty for anarchy, 391 for Judges and servitude, including the times of Samson, Eli and Ruth, and twenty to the day of Mizpeh, and we have Paul's 450 to Samuel the prophet.—Acts 13: 20. So that the twenty years set to anarchy is required to fill Paul's period of 450 years, from the division of the land, to the day when Samuel called them to Mizpeh.

I have now shown the basis and sum of Josephus' age of the world which, if anything can be depended on that is human as a truthful chronology, I think his can; for he lived nearly two thousand years ago, and probably had access to all the histories then extant, and to all the sacred writings; and after the desolation and destruction of his people, he had time enough; and being a ripe scholar, well versed in mathematics, a man of moderation, of a studious turn, and of clear perception, he was the very man to give us this history and chronology. He was keenly alive to everything that related to his people; always ready to expose error in any form, without favoring the errors of his own people, or excusing their faults; and never exaggerating the faults of his enemies. One of his greatest graces was his patience in investigating what he supposed to be truth; as well as his indefatigable labor in compiling a history of such magnitude, and his generosity in presenting it to future generations.

His Antiquities contain mistakes and omissions, which he could not have made himself; and every candid individual, I trust, will absolve Josephus from the gross errors that have crept into his history; and cease to quote him as authority for the spurious numbers that may be found there, which are at variance with what is here presented as his chronology. It is true, he says the first thirteen high priests held the government from the time they left Egypt till Solomon built the temple, six hundred and twelve years; but these years extended beyond the building of the temple, and to the end of the building of his own house, which took thirteen years, and the temple seven, which added to 592 amount to 612; for he says, Ant. 10, 9, 6, the first high priest at the temple which Solomon built was Zadoc; which seems to carry the idea that he did not officiate till the temple was built and finished, and probably his own house likewise.

I hope those who have misrepresented and denounced Josephus, on account of the chronology of his Antiquities, will carefully read this article and compare it with his history, and acknowledge that they have been too severe upon him, and condemned him for what was no fault of his; and could we feel a brotherly charity towards him, we should make some effort to harmonize his numbers, and it is probable many more than are here manifested, might be harmonized in the same way, were we willing to give what we should like to receive. And even if we could not bring all into harmony, we should not reproach him, but consider that he was not responsible for the errors of the original copies, nor for those that have crept in since his death; and therefore as a faithful copyist, he should be held altogether harmless, and his name be had in respectful remembrance for the history of the Sacred Volume, which he has kindly left behind him.

I do not say that this chronology of Josephus is infallible, but I do say he has given the most perfect chain of years, without gap or break, from the creation of Adam to the destruction of Jerusalem, that I have ever seen. One of its most special advantages is, it leaves neither chasm, nor doubling of the chain at the head of our vulgar era, but takes as direct a course for four thousand, two hundred and two years, as does the track of a railroad from one station to another; and supersedes the necessity of any era whatever; though the Grecian, Roman, and Nabonassarian eras were all used in his time, he has no need of either; nor of one single synchronism to complete his chain. To me it looks like a truthful history of years from the foundation of the world. My own feelings would prompt me to rejoice, could I find good evidence that the Lord would come at a much earlier date, than this chronology will admit; but I look in vain for proof of any other point than 1868, for the six thousandth year of the world. Still, when I look at the signs of the times I am reminded that the Lord is at hand; and sometimes can scarcely think of looking forward to the end of so great a period as eight long years; and as this chronology is not all inspired, every one that is wise will prepare to meet his God now, now, now; lest, coming suddenly, the Master find him unprepared.

"Reasons for my Hope."

The following is from Bro. Hastings' interesting work, entitled, "Reasons for my Hope." Every lover of truth should have a copy.—ED.

Our Savior has predicted, that at the time of his appearance, the world will be careless, and secure, and fearless of the coming of that day. "For as it was in the days that were before the flood; they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noah entered into the ark, and knew not until the flood came and took them all away; so SHALL ALSO THE COMING OF THE SON OF MAN BE." Matt. 24: 38, 39. And as in the days of Lot, "the same day that Lot went out of Sodom it rained fire and brimstone from heaven, and destroyed them all, even THUS SHALL IT BE in the day when the SON OF MAN IS REVEALED." Luke 17: 29, 30.

And is not the world in just that state of careless [illegible] to-day? [illegible]

"A Father of the Fatherless."

Ps. 68: 5.

Great God and wilt thou deign to bless
The lone heart of the fatherless?
Yea, wilt thou claim and call thine own
A child of earth unloved, disowned?

Will Jesus kindly bear the part
Of brother to the stricken heart,
That often yearns and sighs in vain
An earthly brother's love to claim?

O! will the Holy Spirit guide
Such strangers through this world of pride
With words of comfort, cheer, and bless
Them through life's dreary wilderness?

May all such sorrowing ones rejoice,
And upward raise th' imploring voice
To thee, as Father, Brother, Friend,
When clouds arise and storms descend.

And when the last great day is come,
The scattered flock is gathered home,
Oh! wilt thou give thine "own new name,"
And let them in thy kingdom reign?

Will Jesus wipe their tears away
In that eternal, glorious day,
And banish in that land of rest
The rugged "thorn" that tears the flesh?

Yea, thou hast said it in thy book,—
"Thy word is truth;" by faith we look
Beyond these clouds of doubt and fear,
And rest in peace and hope secure.

The promise sure is sealed in blood,
All that are his are known of God;
Without respect to birth or name,
The great and small have equal claim.

Turning the Other Cheek.

The instinct of retaliation in every creature is so manifest that it has given rise to the adage—"Tread on a worm and it will turn." In other words, there is no animal so contemptible or weak which will not offer resistance when pressed or trampled upon. The power of retaliation is widely different, but the principle is the same, whether it be in the majestic lion or the abominable rat. If there be an exception, I think it confined to the genus Ovis; and that too, to the female and the young. The sheep and lamb are used as examples of unresisting endurance; but the head of the family, the ram, is sometimes a very quarrelsome and vicious animal.

With his superior power of doing mischief there is no creature so quick at taking offence, and so eager for inflicting retribution as man. His pride, with its thousand sensitive feelers radiating from his corrupt heart, is ever ready to feel and avenge that which collides with his self-esteem, his interest, or his fame; or in speaking of the lowest degraded order of the race, where neither the former or the latter remains, a murder often is committed when only the brutal passions are excited and are clamorous for blood.

Among christians, even, there is some times a lack of forbearance, which taking offence at trifles which were better to have been left unheeded, retorts with open bitterness or covert sarcasm, and opens a wound which no unction but the balm of Gilead can heal; and which need not have existed at all, if the spirit of retaliation had been held in check by the grace of God. It was for the purpose of having this natural proclivity completely under subjection that Christ admonished his disciples, and exemplified his teachings by his own example, that they should bear every wrong and contumely with patience, eschewing all litigation and revenge, bearing their cause to Him to whom vengeance alone belongeth.

The act of smiting on the cheek, or plucking the beard, is considered the greatest indignity. To bear it without instant retaliation, among men, is considered cowardly in the extreme; and nothing but the most abject poltroonery, or the GRACE OF GOD, can arrest a man's hand in vindication of his outraged honor upon such provocation as that. But the doctrine of christianity, as taught by its divine Founder, insists upon a greater degree of humility than simple non-resistance, even the offering of the other cheek to the smiter.

This is an extreme case, but it shows to what a state of discipline the servant of God can and should be brought. There are comparatively few, in our day and generation, and in the land we live in, who are subjected to stripes and imprisonment for the cause of religion, although scoffs are many, and ridicule, almost as hard to endure as blows. These come from outsiders; but are there not too often, by a great deal, bickerings among ourselves, discussion with personalities, profitless because caustic, and creative only of hard feeling and dissension? In truth there is too much, if any; and we should endeavor to curb that spirit which would hurt a brother's feelings, even when we seek to do him good. A man must not use the scourge of cords as Christ did, unless he be like Christ—sinless. Let the suaviter in modo, go with the fortiter in re,—the brotherly kindness with the uncompromising rebuke.

There are some so combative, that in written argument or oral debate, they cross opinions as they would swords—every sentiment in abeyance but that of annihilating their opponent. I am sorry to say that this feeling is among my own numerous failings, and consequently I endeavor to keep out of discussion as much as possible.

Let each and all of us, then, when we feel it a duty to expose an error or correct a mistake, do it in the spirit of love and forbearance, remembering that we are of one family, and look forward to the time when we shall all assemble around our Father's table on that great day of thanksgiving and eternal praise. Let sympathy and charity prevail, rather pitying and mourning a brother's fall, or his wayward course, kindly counselling and reproving him; and not drag him like a criminal to our individual bar, calling in question his motives and his actions, and pronouncing upon him our own judgment and condemnation. Let our conduct be to each other what that of the early christians was, which wrung from their very executioners the exalted encomium—"Behold how these men love one another!"

For the Crisis.

Josephus' Age of the World:

COMPARED WITH MY OWN COMPUTATIONS FROM CREATION.

Josephus, being the only historian uninspired, who has left behind him the sacred records, I feel a great deference towards his history, and a profound and solemn respect for the man, who has with all candor and faithfulness given us a record of events that have transpired in the world, which it would be impossible for us to obtain elsewhere. In some instances he presents the narrative in a manner plainer to be understood than the sacred texts themselves; not only so, but he leaves no chasm or gap unfilled, either at Joshua, anarchy, Judges or Samuel; nor even at the birth of Christ; but carries the whole history of events and periods in one unbroken chain of years, from the creation of Adam, to the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans. I believe he was a remarkable man, of superior talents and acquirements, especially learned and skillful in the Hebrew language, of quick perception, and generally accurate in his computations; and as far as his records depend on his own authority only, he affirmed what he knew to be facts; and they should be received as the truth, as far as he was concerned, for he professes to give a just translation of their sacred books, without adding to or diminishing from the original copies; which we have no reason to disbelieve.

But his Antiquities contain a great many mistakes and evident omissions which he could not have made himself, and though it is evident that he drew some of his numbers from conflicting histories, this is no reason that all the errors and omissions of translators and copyists of his work since his death, should all be laid to him. His works have gone through hundreds and thousands of hands, and perhaps hundreds of editions; and copyists, translators, editors, and printers, have tumbled them over for nearly two thousand years; and this is sufficient to account for the errors they contain; and though I admit that he made some slight mistakes, yet all the gross errors, I must say, should not be laid to him, but to unseen causes. Josephus copied the Greek numbers of the Patriarchal age; but he adopted those of the Hebrew, in his age of the world. The numbers at the heads of his books are somewhat confused; especially the fifth and sixth books, for it is evident that forty years have been taken from the sixth and added to the fifth; that four hundred and thirty-six, instead of four hundred and seventy-six, should stand at the head of the fifth book; and that this forty years should be added to the thirty-two of the sixth book to make it seventy-two, instead of thirty-two; this the events of each book require.

His chronology stands at the head of his books of Antiquities, and is confirmed by assertions in the course of his history, which will be presented; and whatever agrees with the true years that head the book will be admitted; and whatever grossly disagrees with these years, will be repudiated, or unnoticed, and left as mistakes. That he adopts the Hebrew numbers in his age of the world may be seen in B. 8, C. 3, S. 1. There he says, "From Adam, the first man that was created, until Solomon built the temple, there had passed in all, three thousand, one hundred and two years," which is in accordance with the Hebrew, if any be allowed to Samuel. Again, B. 10, C. 9, S. 5, he says, from the generation of Adam, until this befell the temple, (i. e., when it was burned by Nebuchadnezzar,) there were three thousand, five hundred and thirteen years. By these assertions he repudiates the Greek or Septuagint numbers. Though he copies them in his first book, he never makes any use of them afterwards; and by this rejection, the authority of the numbers of his first book falls to the ground, and there he leaves them ever after.

His first book reaches to the death of Isaac; and in the arrangement of the number of years to the periods of some of the books of Antiquities, there is great want of order, though some of them are right Bible numbers; but they are generally so misplaced and huddled together, that their adjustment is extremely perplexing. Still it is necessary that they should, if possible, be put in some kind of order, and it is probable some, who have laughed at Josephus' chronology, and called it a perfect jumble of years, will be surprised when they see the final result of his numbers, from the beginning of the world to the destruction of their city by Titus.

Book I. gives the same age to the first ten patriarchs at their death, as the Bible; but not the same at the birth of the patriarchal sons. After the flood, their age is not given so accurately; and in the book containing the Greek numbers they all amount to one thousand, five hundred and forty-four years more than the Hebrew, to the death of Isaac. But as Josephus only copied those numbers in his first book, but never made use of them afterwards; it will be as well for me to follow his example, and leave them where he left them, and make use of the Hebrew numbers only, not only from Isaac's death but from the creation. He fixes the anarchy and destruction of the Benjaminites between the death of Joshua and the first servitude under Chusan. To all the Judges but two, and to all the kings of Judah but one, he gives the same numbers as the inspired text. To Joshua he assigns twenty-five years, Ant. 5, 1, 29; to Samuel twelve, Ant. 6, 13, 5. "He went from year to year in circuit to Bethel and Gilgal and Mizpeh, and judged Israel in all those places; and his return was to Ramah, for there was his house, and there he judged Israel." "And when Samuel was old he made his sons judges." "And his sons walked not in his ways but turned aside after lucre, took bribes and perverted judgment." This provoked Israel to ask a king. How long they were suffered to plunder the people, before they became so enraged as to demand a king, we are not informed; but it was probably several years. It is very likely that Samuel here presided over the Israelites twelve years, as Josephus records; and all this was after the death of Eli, and after the ark of God had been returned to its place, by the Philistines, and had been in the house of Abinadab twenty years, and before Saul was anointed king; so that none of these years can possibly be assigned to Saul. We have the inspired text,—"God gave them Saul the son of Cis, a man of the tribe of Benjamin, by the space of forty years."—Acts 13: 21. So that we have the same authority to assign full forty years to Saul, that we can have to David or Solomon.

In examining the Books of Antiquities from the end of the first book to the twentieth, I find but one very serious error as to the years at the heads of the books; and that occurs in the eleventh book between the first of Cyrus and the death of Alexander the Great; which gives an overplus of forty-one years and five months more than enough to fill the period; but we must recollect that there was no B. C. nor A. D. in the time of Josephus, to reckon to or from, and Josephus gave these numbers as he found them in the histories; but they are merely nominal years; i. e., they exist only in name, and not in reality; and this can at once be accounted for when we consider the conflicting statements of different historians, as to the length of the reign of some of the Medo-Persian kings, which will be noticed in due time. Book I. reaches to the death of Isaac; but I shall leave the first book as containing numbers of doubtful authority, and adopt the inspired Hebrew numbers to the epoch of Isaac's death. To the deluge 1657, to the call of Abraham 427, to the birth of Isaac 25, his age 180,—2289. I shall begin at the above epoch and count up all the years that I find at the heads of all his Books of Antiquities, from the end of the first book to the twentieth; feeling that I am discharging an imperative duty, in defending him from various misrepresentations, by giving a truthful view of the chronology of his history; which perhaps may not be without some interest and profit both, to those who have any taste for the chronology of the world. I shall give all the years from the above epoch to the last book inclusive, but the extra forty-one, and these will be placed in such a position that all can see that they can have no place where they seem to be located; and that they were inserted by mistake, made by computing erroneous numbers to some of the kings of Persia.

We know that the histories from whence Josephus drew numbers of the years of the Medo-Persian kings were not all right, by his giving more years to Xerxes than he ever reigned. On p. 227, Ant. XI, 6, 7, he speaks of "the 25th of Xerxes", and in the next Sec., after Nehemiah had built the walls of Jerusalem, which took two years and four months, he says, they were built in the 28th year of Xerxes; which is seven years more than he actually reigned; for I know of no one now that assigns to him any more than twenty-one years; and I have often seen in ancient histories forty-nine or fifty years assigned to Artaxerxes, whereas he reigned no more than forty-one years. Here are nine years too many set to Artaxerxes, which in the reigns of these two kings amount to sixteen years more than they reigned. Cyrus also is often said to have reigned thirty years; but he reigned only seven after the end of the Babylonish captivity. Now here are twenty-three years more to be added to the before-mentioned sixteen, which all amount to thirty-nine years, out of the foregoing forty-one, leaving but two years unaccounted for; and it would be no difficult task to find the other two, were we in possession of those ancient histories; and as these nominal years are found in the discordant histories of those times, it leaves the copyist harmless; for he says he gave them as he found them.

It is a mathematical demonstration, that between the first of Cyrus, B. C. 536, and the death of Alexander the Great, B. C. 324, no more than 212 years could ever elapse; and I think it an act of justice to a great and useful man to remove every obstruction from the chronology of his history, so extensively beneficial to mankind; and I think I shall be sustained by every well-informed individual who knows of those conflicting numbers assigned to those kings, and who also know that there is no latitude here for them to exist. In comparing numbers, I shall put the years of several of his books together, as they will harmonize better, and in my own computations I shall assign twelve years to Samuel and forty to Saul. In other respects I shall not materially differ from Bliss' Anal. Sac. Chron.

Book I. closes with the death of Isaac, to which time I feel justified in assigning to Josephus the inspired Hebrew numbers; not because I believe they are right and the Septuagint wrong, but because he himself repudiated the Greek numbers, and adopted the Hebrew repeatedly; as has been shown (and probably will be again in due time), from the creation of Adam for several thousand years, in recording the age of the world; which proves that though he copied the Septuagint, he had no use for it afterwards. I shall therefore set to him the same number of years as to myself at the epoch of Isaac's death; the same which the Hebrew Scriptures give, it being A. M. 2289. I shall give the comparison in a table of two columns. The first will give Josephus' numbers, at the head of his books, as the outline and foundation of his chronology. The second will give my own computations.

CHRONOLOGICAL TABLE.

	His.	Mine.
Inspired Hebrew numbers to the epoch of Isaac's death	2289	2289
Book 2d gives a period of two hundred and twenty years from the death of Isaac to the exodus out of Egypt, which is five less than I make.	220
I make two hundred and twenty-five in this period. How this five years could be removed from this period cannot be accounted for; for Jacob was 120 years old when his father Isaac died, having been born when his father was 60; and when Jacob, at the call of his son Joseph, stood before the king of Egypt, he was 130 years old; which was ten years after Isaac's death; and the sojourn of Jacob and his sons in Egypt was two hundred and fifteen years, to which add the foregoing ten, and we have two hundred and twenty-five years. But these five years are not lost; we shall find them in the course of the era.		225
Books 3d and 4th give a period of forty years in the wilderness. I give this as a Bible number, to the death and mourning for Moses. Here, from the exode, begins Josephus' period of 592 years, to the temple.	40	40
Books 5th and 6th give a period of five hundred and eight years from the death of Moses to the death of Saul	508
As this period assigns twelve years to Samuel, and forty to Saul, I shall adopt the same number.		508
Book 7th gives forty years from the death of Saul to the death of David. As this is an inspired number, I give the same.	40	40
At the fourth year of Solomon, we find Josephus' period full, of five hundred and ninety-two years current, made up as follows: In the wilderness 40, to the death of Saul 508, to the death of David 40, to the 4th of Solomon 4—592 in all. If we now add the years anterior to the death of Jacob, (2289) and his number between that time and the exode (220), to the 592 years, we have his age of the world at the building of the temple, three thousand one hundred and one years; and though he elsewhere sums it up as 3102, that one year was probably a mistake in casting his figures. My own computations to the temple amount to three thousand one hundred and six; and it will be seen that had he not left out the five years that belong to the period between the death of Isaac and the exode, my numbers would not have exceeded his, for both would have been 3106. But as it is, he only antedates the building of the temple, five years; for we shall overtake these missing years yet.
Books 8th, 9th, 10th, respectively give the following years: 163, 157, 182 1-2—in all five hundred and two and a half years, from the death of David to the first of Cyrus, which is eight and a half more than I make. David died about B. C. 1030; 1st of Cyrus B. C. 536; I make this period but	502 1-2	494
Book 11th contains the dreaded mistake giving the record of two hundred and fifty-three years and five months, between the first of Cyrus and the death of Alexander the Great,—forty-one years too many. The space between the 1st of Cyrus B. C. 536, and the death of Alexander B. C. 324, is two hundred and twelve years. I shall fill it as full as it will hold, and for the reasons already given, leave the forty-one false years out of the amount.	212	212
Books 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, respectively give the following years: 170, 82, 32, 18, 12, 14—in all 328 years from the death of Alexander to the banishment of Archelaus. Alexander died B. C. 324, and Archelaus' dethronement was in A. D. 10. This is six years less than I make. I make the years of this period three hundred and thirty-four.	328	334
Books 18th, 19th, 20th, respectively give the following years: 32, 3 1-2, 22—in all 57 1-2 from the fall of Archelaus to the first year of Gessius Florus. Florus began his administration as governor of Judea in the year of Nero; and by overbearing mismanagement and violent injustice he drove the Jews to madness, and necessitated them to take up arms against the Romans in his second year, which was the 12th of Nero. Ant. B. 20, C. 11, S. 1. Nero lived three years after Florus came into Judea; his whole reign being 14 years. Galba, Otho and Vitellius contended for empire some six or eight months, when Vespasian was proclaimed emperor of Rome, in whose second year, Jerusalem was destroyed.—Jewish Wars, 6, 10, 1. If we add three numbers, 57 1-2, 3, 2, they equal 62 1-2, which is 2 1-2 years more than I make. The Vulgar era gives A. D. 70 for the date of the destruction of Jerusalem. Archelaus fell A. D. 10,—there remains sixty years.	62 1-2	60
The forgoing table will show the result of Josephus' age of the world from the creation to the fall of the Jewish nation under the Romans. In the period between the death of Isaac and the exode he gives five years less than I do, and also between the death of Alexander and the fall of Archelaus he gives six years less, but this loss is counterbalanced by the gain of a like number of years in other periods; for between the death of David and the first of Cyrus, he gives eight and a half more years than I do; and two and a half years between the fall of Archelaus and the destruction of the city, more than I do, so that the gain is equal to the loss, which leaves them strikingly counterpoised, with eleven years in each scale. I have assigned twelve years to Samuel, and in no other instance have I differed from Bliss' Anal. Sac. Chron. I have given all the years and half years to be found in all his books of Antiquities beyond the first, (with the exception of those forty-one skeleton years, so abundantly shown to be a false estimate,) from the death of Isaac, to which point the inspired Hebrew numbers were attached, to the fall of Jerusalem; and it is a remarkable coincidence that by assigning twelve years to Samuel, my computations are exactly in accordance with those of Josephus. From the creation of the world, we both concur in assigning four thousand, two hundred and two years, as the age of the world when Jerusalem was destroyed.	4202	4202
From which, if we deduct 70,	70	70
we have four thousand one hundred and thirty-two, for the age of the world at the birth of Christ;	4132	4132
and if we add 1860,	1860	1860
we find that we are now living in the five thousand, nine hundred and ninety-second year of the world.	5992	5992

This chronology of Josephus I think may, as much as any thing human, be relied on. There is not a gap nor a break in the whole chain, from the death of Isaac to the fall of Jerusalem; and we have the inspired Hebrew numbers without a break, up to Isaac's death. There are some slight mistakes, it is true; but nothing that amounts to the weight of a feather as to the result. As I wish to have all see and understand the numbers contained in Josephus' period of five hundred and ninety-two years, between the exode and the temple, I will give a table of the numbers contained in it, with the authority on which each number is based.

It will be seen by the above table that the time of the Elders and anarchy is not a given number, either in the Bible or Josephus; all the given numbers in both amount to 572 years; and as the period twenty years is required to fill the period, we suppose that the time of the Elders that overlived Joshua, and the anarchy that followed their death, to amount to just twenty years. Nor does Josephus give the seven years servitude under Midian, nor Toba's twenty-three, nor Abdon's eight, nor Saul's forty; but it is here shown that all these given numbers of Josephus, together with Joshua's twenty-five, and Samuel's twelve; and all the given numbers in the Bible from the time they left Egypt, till Solomon began to build the temple, in the 4th year of his reign, are all included in this period; and then the twenty for anarchy is required to fill it. And if from Joshua's twenty-five, we deduct six for division of land, we have nineteen years left to Joshua. Then allow twenty for anarchy, 391 for Judges and servitude, including the times of Samson, Eli and Ruth, and twenty to the day of Mizpeh, and we have Paul's 450 to Samuel the prophet.—Acts 13: 20. So that the twenty years set to anarchy is required to fill Paul's period of 450 years, from the division of the land, to the day when Samuel called them to Mizpeh.

I have now shown the basis and sum of Josephus' age of the world which, if anything can be depended on that is human as a truthful chronology, I think his can; for he lived nearly two thousand years ago, and probably had access to all the histories then extant, and to all the sacred writings; and after the desolation and destruction of his people, he had time enough; and being a ripe scholar, well versed in mathematics, a man of moderation, of a studious turn, and of clear perception, he was the very man to give us this history and chronology. He was keenly alive to everything that related to his people; always ready to expose error in any form, without favoring the errors of his own people, or excusing their faults; and never exaggerating the faults of his enemies. One of his greatest graces was his patience in investigating what he supposed to be truth; as well as his indefatigable labor in compiling a history of such magnitude, and his generosity in presenting it to future generations.

His Antiquities contain mistakes and omissions, which he could not have made himself; and every candid individual, I trust, will absolve Josephus from the gross errors that have crept into his history; and cease to quote him as authority for the spurious numbers that may be found there, which are at variance with what is here presented as his chronology. It is true, he says the first thirteen high priests held the government from the time they left Egypt till Solomon built the temple, six hundred and twelve years; but these years extended beyond the building of the temple, and to the end of the building of his own house, which took thirteen years, and the temple seven, which added to 592 amount to 612; for he says, Ant. 10, 9, 6, the first high priest at the temple which Solomon built was Zadoc; which seems to carry the idea that he did not officiate till the temple was built and finished, and probably his own house likewise.

I hope those who have misrepresented and denounced Josephus, on account of the chronology of his Antiquities, will carefully read this article and compare it with his history, and acknowledge that they have been too severe upon him, and condemned him for what was no fault of his; and could we feel a brotherly charity towards him, we should make some effort to harmonize his [illegible] more than are [illegible] harmonized in the [illegible] willing to give [illegible] ceive. And even if we could not bring all into harmony, we should not [illegible] but consider that he was not responsible for the errors of the original copyist, nor for those that have crept in since his death; and therefore as a faithful copyist, he should be held altogether harmless, and his works be had in respectful remembrance for the history of the Sacred Volume, which he has kindly left behind him.

I do not say that this chronology of Josephus is infallible, but I do say he has given the most perfect chain of years, without gap or break, from the creation of Adam to the destruction of Jerusalem, that I have ever seen. One of its most special advantages is, it leaves neither chasm nor doubling of the chain at the head of our vulgar era, but takes as direct a course for four thousand, two hundred and two years, as does the track of a railroad from one station to another; and supersedes the necessity of any era whatever; though the Grecian, Roman, and [illegible] eras were all used in his time, he has no need of either; nor of one single synchronism to complete his chain. To me it looks like a truthful history of years from the foundation of the world. My own feelings would prompt me to rejoice, could I find good evidence that the Lord would come at a much earlier date, than this chronology will admit; but I look in vain for proof of any other point than 1868, for the six thousandth year of the world. Still, when I look at the signs of the times I am reminded that the Lord is at hand; and sometimes can scarcely think of looking forward to the end of so great a period as eight long years; and as this chronology is not all inspired, every one that is wise will prepare to meet his God now, now, now; lest, coming suddenly, the Master find him unprepared.

"Reasons for my Hope."

The following is from Bro. Hastings' interesting work, entitled, "Reasons for the Hope." Every lover of truth should have a copy.—ED.

Our Savior has predicted, that at the time of his appearance, the world will be careless, and secure, and [illegible] of the coming of that day. "For as it was in the days that were before the flood; they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noah entered into the ark, and knew not until the flood came and took them all away; so SHALL ALSO THE COMING OF THE SON OF MAN BE." Matt. 24: 38, 39. And as in the days of Lot, "the same day that Lot went out of Sodom it rained fire and brimstone from heaven, and destroyed them all, even THUS SHALL IT BE in the day when the SON OF MAN IS REVEALED." Luke [illegible].

And is not the world in just that state of careless slumber now? Is there not the same apathy and lethargy to-day? Do not worldliness, and lust, and pleasure, engross the minds of the multitudes now? Has not the world combined to sing of the "good time that's coming," and forget the duties that are present, and the dangers that are impending? Have not vast multitudes of the professed church [illegible] tell what LUTHER called "[illegible] FORGED BY SATAN, that he might [illegible] sound doctrine;" namely: that "before the latter day all the world shall [illegible] CHRISTIANS?" Locked in the [illegible] worldly slumber, men heed not the [illegible] of danger. And as the flood [illegible] upon their dreams, or as the [illegible] turned to deep wailing the [illegible] ure of the cities of the plain, so [illegible] day of the Lord" shall [illegible] upon the careless and ungodly, who people the world at the [illegible] Is not this wide-spread [illegible] most solemn portent of approaching [illegible] While the wicked [illegible] lips, and life, "there is no [illegible] things continue as they were from the beginning of the [illegible] the humble and the [illegible] the day of the Lord, [illegible] a thief in the night [illegible] in the general [illegible] pray always, that we may be accounted worthy to escape all [illegible] come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man." "A Father of the Fatherless."

Ps. 68: 5.

Great God and wilt thou deign to bless
The lone heart of the fatherless?
Yes, wilt thou claim and call thine own
A child of earth unloved, disowned?

Will Jesus kindly bear the part
Of brother to the stricken heart,
That often yearns and sighs in vain
An earthly brother's love to claim?

O! will the Holy Spirit guide
Such strangers through this world of pride
With words of comfort, cheer, and bless
Them through life's dreary wilderness?

May all such sorrowing ones rejoice,
And upward raise th' imploring voice
To thee, as Father, Brother, Friend,
When clouds arise and storms descend.

And when the last great day is come,
The scattered flock is gathered home,
Oh! wilt thou give thine "own new name,"
And let them in thy kingdom reign?

Will Jesus wipe their tears away
In that eternal, glorious day,
And banish in that land of rest
The rugged "thorn" that tears the flesh?

Yea, thou hast said it in thy book,—
"Thy word is truth;" by faith we look
Beyond these clouds of doubt and fear,
And rest in peace and hope secure.

The promise sure is sealed in blood,
All that are his are known of God;
Without respect to birth or name,
The great and small have equal claim.

Turning the Other Cheek.

The instinct of retaliation in every creature is so manifest that it has given rise to the adage—"Tread on a worm and it will turn." In other words, there is no animal so contemptible or weak which will not offer resistance when pressed or trampled upon. The power of retaliation is widely different, but the principle is the same, whether it be in the majestic lion or the abominable rat. If there be an exception, I think it confined to the genus Ovis; and that too, to the female and the young. The sheep and lamb are used as examples of unresisting endurance, but the head of the family, the ram, is sometimes a very quarrelsome and vicious animal.

With his superior power of doing mischief there is no creature so quick at taking offence, and so eager for inflicting retribution as man. His pride, with its thousand sensitive feelers radiating from his corrupt heart, is ever ready to feel and avenge that which collides with his self-esteem, his interest, or his fame; or in speaking of the lowest degraded order of the race, where neither the former or the latter remains, a murder often is committed when only the brutal passions are excited and are clamorous for blood.

Among christians, even, there is sometimes a lack of forbearance, which taking offence at trifles which were better to have been left unheeded, retorts with open bitterness or covert sarcasm, and opens a wound which no unction but the balm of Gilead can heal; and which need not have existed at all, if the spirit of retaliation had been held in check by the grace of God. It was for the purpose of having this natural proclivity completely under subjection that Christ admonished his disciples, and exemplified his teachings by his own example, that they should bear every wrong and contumely with patience, eschewing all litigation and revenge, bearing their cause to Him to whom vengeance alone belongeth.

The act of smiting on the cheek, or plucking the beard, is considered the greatest indignity. To bear it without instant retaliation, among men, is considered cowardly in the extreme; and nothing but the most abject poltroonery, or the grace of God, can arrest a man's hand in vindication of his outraged honor upon such provocation as that. But the doctrine of christianity, as taught by its divine Founder, insists upon a greater degree of humility than simple non-resistance, even the offering of the other cheek to the smiter. [illegible] eration, and in the land we live in, who are subjected to stripes and imprisonment for the cause of religion, although scoffs are many, and ridicule, almost as hard to endure as blows. These come from outsiders; but are there not too often, by a great deal, bickerings among ourselves, discussion with personalities, profitless because caustic, and creative only of hard feeling and dissension? In truth there is too much, if any; and we should endeavor to curb that spirit which would hurt a brother's feelings, even when we seek to do him good. A man must not use the scourge of cords as Christ did, unless he be like Christ—sinless. Let the suaviter in modo, go with the fortiter in re,—the brotherly kindness with the uncompromising rebuke.

This is an extreme case, but it shows to what a state of discipline the servant of God are required [illegible] are comparatively few [illegible]

There are some so combative, that in written argument or oral debate, they cross opinions as they would swords—every sentiment in abeyance but that of annihilating their opponent. I am sorry to say that this feeling is among my own numerous failings, and consequently I endeavor to keep out of discussion as much as possible.

Let each and all of us, then, when we feel it a duty to expose an error or correct a mistake, do it in the spirit of love and forbearance, remembering that we are of one family, and look forward to the time when we shall all assemble around our Father's table on that great day of thanksgiving and eternal praise. Let sympathy and charity prevail, rather pitying and mourning a brother's fall, or his wayward course, kindly counselling and reproving him; and not drag him like a criminal to our individual bar, calling in question his motives and his actions, and pronouncing upon him our own judgment and condemnation. Let our conduct be to each other what that of the early christians was, which wrung from their very executioners the exalted encomium—"Behold how these men love one another!"

Josephus' Age of the World.

COMPARED WITH MY OWN COMPUTATIONS FROM CREATION.

Josephus, being the only historian uninspired, who has left behind him the sacred records, I feel a great deference towards his history, and a profound and solemn respect for the man, who has with all candor and faithfulness given us a record of events that have transpired in the world, which it would be impossible for us to obtain elsewhere. In some instances he presents the narrative in a manner plainer to be understood than the sacred texts themselves; not only so, but he leaves no chasm or gap unfilled, either at Joshua, anarchy, Judges or Samuel, nor even at the birth of Christ, but carries the whole history of events and periods in one unbroken chain of years, from the creation of Adam, to the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans. I believe he was a remarkable man, of superior talents and acquirements, especially learned and skillful in the Hebrew language, of quick perception, and generally accurate in his computations; and as far as his records depend on his own authority only, he affirmed what he knew to be facts, and they should be received as the truth, as far as he was concerned, for he professes to give a just translation of their sacred books, without adding to or diminishing from the original copies, which we have no reason to disbelieve.

But his Antiquities contain a great many mistakes and evident omissions which he could not have made himself, and though it is evident that he drew some of his numbers from conflicting histories, this is no reason that all the errors and omissions of translators and copyists of his work since his death, should all be laid to him. His works have gone through hundreds and thousands of hands, and perhaps hundreds of editions; and copyists, translators, editors, and printers, have tumbled them over for nearly two thousand years, and this is sufficient to account for the errors they contain; and though I admit that he made some slight mistakes, yet all the gross errors, I must say, should not be laid to him, but to unseen causes. Josephus copied the Greek numbers of the Patriarchal age; but he adopted those of the Hebrew, in his age of the world. The numbers at the heads of his books are somewhat confused; especially the fifth and sixth books, for it is evident that forty years have been taken from the sixth and added to the fifth; that four hundred and thirty-six, instead of four hundred and seventy-six, should stand at the head of the fifth book; and that this forty years should be added to the thirty-two of the sixth book to make it seventy-two, instead of thirty-two; this the events of each book require.

His chronology stands at the head of his books of Antiquities, and is confirmed by assertions in the course of his history, [illegible] which will be presented, and whatever agrees with the true years that head the book will be admitted; and whatever grossly disagrees with these years, will be repudiated, or unnoticed, and left as mistakes. That he adopts the Hebrew numbers in his age of the world may be seen in B. 8, C. 3, S. 1. There he says, "From Adam, the first man that was created, until Solomon built the temple, there had passed in all, three thousand, one hundred and two years," which is in accordance with the Hebrew, if any be allowed to Samuel. Again, B. 10, C. 9, S. 5, he says, from the generation of Adam, until this befell the temple, (i. e., when it was burned by Nebuchadnezzar,) there were three thousand, five hundred and thirteen years. By these assertions he repudiates the Greek or Septuagint numbers. Though he copies them in his first book, he never makes any use of them afterwards; and by this rejection, the authority of the numbers of his first book falls to the ground, and there he leaves them ever after.

His first book reaches to the death of Isaac, and in the arrangement of the number of years to the periods of some of the books of Antiquities, there is great want of order, though some of them are right Bible numbers; but they are generally so misplaced and huddled together, that their adjustment is extremely perplexing. Still it is necessary that they should, if possible, be put in some kind of order, and it is probable some, who have laughed at Josephus' chronology, and called it a perfect jumble of years, will be surprised when they see the final result of his numbers, from the beginning of the world to the destruction of their city by Titus.

Book I. gives the same age to the first ten patriarchs at their death, as the Bible; but not the same at the birth of the patriarchal sons. After the flood, their age is not given so accurately, and in the book containing the Greek numbers they all amount to one thousand, five hundred and forty-four years more than the Hebrew, to the death of Isaac. But as Josephus only copied those numbers in his first book, but never made use of them afterwards; it will be as well for me to follow his example, and leave them where he left them, and make use of the Hebrew numbers only, not only from Isaac's death but from the creation. He fixes the anarchy and destruction of the Benjaminites between the death of Joshua and the first servitude under Chusan. To all the Judges but two, and to all the kings of Judah but one, he gives the same numbers as the inspired text. To Joshua he assigns twenty-five years, Ant. 5, 1, 29, to Samuel twelve, Ant. 6, 13, 5. "He went from year to year in circuit to Bethel and Gilgal and Mizpeh, and judged Israel in all those places, and his return was to Ramah, for there was his house, and there he judged Israel." "And when Samuel was old he made his sons judges." "And his sons walked not in his ways but turned aside after lucre, took bribes and perverted judgment." This provoked Israel to ask a king. How long they were suffered to plunder the people, before they became so enraged as to demand a king, we are not informed, but it was probably several years. It is very likely that Samuel here presided over the Israelites twelve years, as Josephus records, and all this was after the death of Eli, and after the ark of God had been returned to its place, by the Philistines, and had been in the house of Abinadab twenty years, and before Saul was anointed king, so that none of these years can possibly be assigned to Saul. We have the inspired text,—"God gave them Saul the son of Cis, a man of the tribe of Benjamin, by the space of forty years."—Acts 13: 21. So that we have the same authority to assign full forty years to Saul, that we can have to David or Solomon.

In examining the Books of Antiquities from the end of the first book to the twentieth, I find but one very serious error as to the years at the heads of the books; and that occurs in the eleventh book between the first of Cyrus and the death of Alexander the Great; which gives an overplus of forty-one years and five months more than enough to fill the period; but we must recollect that there was no B. C. nor A. D. in the time of Josephus, to reckon to or from, and Josephus gave these numbers as he found them in the histories; but they are merely nominal years; i. e., they exist only in name, and not in reality; and this can at once be accounted for when we consider the conflicting statements of different historians, as to the length of the reign of some of the Medo-Persian kings, which will be noticed in due time. Book I. reaches to the death of Isaac; but I shall leave the first book as containing numbers of doubtful authority, and adopt the inspired Hebrew numbers to the epoch of Isaac's death.

To the deluge 1657, to the call of Abraham 427, to the birth of Isaac 25, his age 180,—2289. I shall begin at the above epoch and count up all the years that I find at the heads of all his Books of Antiquities, from the end of the first book to the twentieth; feeling that I am discharging an imperative duty, in defending him from various misrepresentations, by giving a truthful view of the chronology of his history; which perhaps may not be without some interest and profit both, to those who have any taste for the chronology of the world. I shall give all the years from the above epoch to the last book inclusive, but the extra forty-one, and these will be placed in such a position that all can see that they can have no place where they seem to be located; and that they were inserted by mistake, made by computing erroneous numbers to some of the kings of Persia.

We know that the histories from whence Josephus drew numbers of the years of the Medo-Persian kings were not all right, by his giving more years to Xerxes than he ever reigned. On p. 227, Ant. XI, 6, 7, he speaks of "the 25th of Xerxes", and in the next Sec., after Nehemiah had built the walls of Jerusalem, which took two years and four months, he says, they were built in the 28th year of Xerxes; which is seven years more than he actually reigned; for I know of no one now that assigns to him any more than twenty-one years, and I have often seen in ancient histories forty-nine or fifty years assigned to Artaxerxes, whereas he reigned no more than forty-one years. Here are nine years too many set to Artaxerxes, which in the reigns of these two kings amount to sixteen years more than they reigned. Cyrus also is often said to have reigned thirty years; but he reigned only seven after the end of the Babylonish captivity. Now here are twenty-three years more to be added to the before-mentioned sixteen, which all amount to thirty-nine years, out of the foregoing forty-one, leaving but two years unaccounted for; and it would be no difficult task to find the other two, were we in possession of those ancient histories; and as these nominal years are found in the discordant histories of those times, it leaves the copyist harmless, for he says he gave them as he found them.

It is a mathematical demonstration, that between the first of Cyrus, B. C. 536, and the death of Alexander the Great, B. C. 324, no more than 212 years could ever elapse; and I think it an act of justice to a great and useful man to remove every obstruction from the chronology of his history, so extensively beneficial to mankind; and I think I shall be sustained by every well-informed individual who knows of those conflicting numbers assigned to those kings, and who also know that there is no latitude here for them to exist. In comparing numbers, I shall put the years of several of his books together, as they will harmonize better, and in my own computations I shall assign twelve years to Samuel and forty to Saul. In other respects I shall not materially differ from Bliss' Anal. Sac. Chron.

Book I. closes with the death of Isaac, to which time I feel justified in assigning to Josephus the inspired Hebrew numbers; not because I believe they are right and the Septuagint wrong, but because he himself repudiated the Greek numbers, and adopted the Hebrew repeatedly, as has been shown (and probably will be again in due time), from the creation of Adam for several thousand years, in recording the age of the world; which proves that though he copied the Septuagint, he had no use for it afterwards. I shall therefore set to him the same number of years as to myself at the epoch of Isaac's death; the same which the Hebrew Scriptures give, it being A. M. 2289. I shall give the comparison in a table of two columns. The first will give Josephus' numbers, at the head of his books, as the outline and foundation of his chronology. The second will give my own computations.

CHRONOLOGICAL TABLE.

	His.	Mine.
Inspired Hebrew numbers to the epoch of Isaac's death	2289	2289
Book 2d gives a period of two hundred and twenty years from the death of Isaac to the exodus out of Egypt, which is five less than I make.	220
I make two hundred and twenty-five in this period. How this five years could be removed from this period cannot be accounted for, for Jacob was 120 years old when his father Isaac died, having been born when his father was 60; and when Jacob, at the call of his son Joseph, stood before the king of Egypt, he was 130 years old; which was ten years after Isaac's death; and the sojourn of Jacob and his sons in Egypt was two hundred and fifteen years, to which add the foregoing ten, and we have two hundred and twenty-five years. But these five years are not lost; we shall find them in the course of the era.		225
Books 3d and 4th give a period of forty years in the wilderness. I give this as a Bible number, to the death and mourning for Moses.	40	40
Here, from the exode, begins Josephus period of 592 years, to the temple. Books 5th and 6th give a period of five hundred and eight years from the death of Moses to the death of Saul	508
As this period assigns twelve years to Samuel, and forty to Saul, I shall adopt the same number.		508
Book 7th gives forty years from the death of Saul to the death of David. As this is an inspired number, I give the same.	40	40
At the fourth year of Solomon, we find Josephus' period full, of five hundred and ninety-two years current, made up as follows: In the wilderness 40, to the death of Saul 508, to the death of David 40, to the 4th of Solomon 4—592 in all. If we now add the years anterior to the death of Jacob, (2289) and his number between that time and the exode (220), to the 592 years, we have his age of the world at the building of the temple, three thousand one hundred and one years; and though he elsewhere sums it up as 3102, that one year was probably a mistake in casting his figures. My own computations to the temple amount to three thousand one hundred and six; and it will be seen that had he not left out the five years that belong to the period between the death of Isaac and the exode, my numbers would not have exceeded his, for both would have been 3106. But as it is, he only antedates the building of the temple, five years; for we shall overtake these missing years yet.
Books 8th, 9th, 10th, respectively give the following years: 163, 157, 182 1-2—in all five hundred and two and a half years, from the death of David to the first of Cyrus, which is eight and a half more than I make. David died about B. C. 1030; 1st of Cyrus B. C. 536, I make this period but	502 1-2	494
Book 11th contains the dreaded mistake giving the record of two hundred and fifty-three years and five months, between the first of Cyrus and the death of Alexander the Great,—forty-one years too many. The space between the 1st of Cyrus B. C. 536, and the death of Alexander B. C. 324, is two hundred and twelve years. I shall fill it as full as it will hold, and for the reasons already given, leave the forty-one false years out of the amount.	212	212
Books 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, respectively give the following years: 170, 82, 32, 18, 12, 14—in all 328 years from the death of Alexander to the banishment of Archelaus. Alexander died B. C. 324, and Archelaus' dethronement was in A. D. 10. This is six years less than I make.	328
I make the years of this period three hundred and thirty-four		334
Books 18th, 19th, 20th, respectively give the following years: 32, 3 1-2, 22—in all 57 1-2 from the fall of Archelaus to the first year of Gessius Florus. Florus began his administration as governor of Judea in the year of Nero, and by overbearing mismanagement and violent injustice he drove the Jews to madness, and necessitated them to take up arms against the Romans in his second year, which was the 12th of Nero. Ant. B. 20, C. 11, S. 1. Nero lived three years after Florus came into Judea, his whole reign being 14 years. Galba, Otho and Vitellius contended for empire some six or eight months, when Vespasian was proclaimed emperor of Rome, in whose second year, Jerusalem was destroyed.—Jewish Wars, 6, 10, 1. If we add three numbers, 57 1-2, 3, 2, they equal 62 1-2, which is 2 1-2 years more than I make.	62 1-2
The Vulgar era gives A. D. 70 for the date of the destruction of Jerusalem. Archelaus fell A. D. 10,—there remains sixty years.		60
The foregoing table will show the result of Josephus' age of the world from the creation to the fall of the Jewish nation under the Romans. In the period between the death of Isaac and the exode he gives five years less than I do, and also between the death of Alexander and the fall of Archelaus he gives six years less, but this loss is counterbalanced by the gain of a like number of years in other periods; for between the death of David and the first of Cyrus, he gives eight and a half more years than I do; and two and a half years between the fall of Archelaus and the destruction of the city, more than I do, so that the gain is equal to the loss, which leaves them strikingly counterpoised, with eleven years in each scale. I have assigned twelve years to Samuel, and in no other instance have I differed from Bliss' Anal. Sac. Chron. I have given all the years and half years to be found in all his books of Antiquities beyond the first, (with the exception of those forty-one skeleton years, so abundantly shown to be a false estimate,) from the death of Isaac, to which point the inspired Hebrew numbers were attached, to the fall of Jerusalem; and it is a remarkable coincidence that by assigning twelve years to Samuel, my computations are exactly in accordance with those of Josephus. From the creation of the world, we both concur in assigning four thousand, two hundred and two years, as the age of the world when Jerusalem was destroyed.	4202	4202
From which, if we deduct 70,	70	70
we have four thousand one hundred and thirty-two for the age of the world at the birth of Christ;	4132	4132
and if we add 1860,	1860	1860
we find that we are now living in the five thousand nine hundred and ninety-second year of the world.	5992	5992

This chronology of Josephus I think may, as much as any thing human, be relied on. There is not a gap nor a break in the whole chain, from the death of Isaac to the fall of Jerusalem; and we have the inspired Hebrew numbers without a break, up to Isaac's death. There are some slight mistakes, it is true; but nothing that amounts to the weight of a feather as to the result. As I wish to have all see and understand the numbers contained in Josephus' period of five hundred and ninety-two years, between the exode and the temple, I will give a table of the numbers contained in it, with the authority on which each number is based.

It will be seen by the above table that the time of the Elders and anarchy is not a given number, either in the Bible or Josephus; all the given numbers in both amount to 572 years; and as the period twenty years is required to fill the period, we suppose that the time of the Elders that overlived Joshua, and the anarchy that followed their death, to amount to just twenty years. Nor does Josephus give the seven years servitude under Midian, nor Toba's twenty-three, nor Abdon's eight, nor Saul's forty; but it is here shown that all these given numbers of Josephus, together with Joshua's twenty-five, and Samuel's twelve; and all the given numbers in the Bible from the time they left Egypt, till Solomon began to build the temple, in the 4th year of his reign, are all included in this period; and then the twenty for anarchy is required to fill it. And if from Joshua's twenty-five, we deduct six for division of land, we have nineteen years left to Joshua. Then allow twenty for anarchy, 391 for Judges and servitude, including the times of Samson, Eli and Ruth, and twenty to the day of Mizpeh, and we have Paul's 450 to Samuel the prophet.—Acts 13: 20. So that the twenty years set to anarchy is required to fill Paul's period of 450 years, from the division of the land, to the day when Samuel called them to Mizpeh.

I have now shown the basis and sum of Josephus' age of the world which, if anything can be depended on that is human as a truthful chronology, I think his can; for he lived nearly two thousand years ago, and probably had access to all the histories then extant, and to all the sacred writings; and after the desolation and destruction of his people, he had time enough; and being a ripe scholar, well versed in mathematics, a man of moderation, of a studious turn, and of clear perception, he was the very man to give us this history and chronology. He was keenly alive to everything that related to his people; always ready to expose error in any form, without favoring the errors of his own people, or excusing their faults; and never exaggerating the faults of his enemies. One of his greatest graces was his patience in investigating what he supposed to be truth; as well as his indefatigable labor in compiling a history of such magnitude, and his generosity in presenting it to future generations.

His Antiquities contain mistakes and omissions, which he could not have made himself; and every candid individual, I trust, will absolve Josephus from the gross errors that have crept into his history; and cease to quote him as authority for the spurious numbers that may be found there, which are at variance with what is here presented as his chronology. It is true, he says the first thirteen high priests held the government from the time they left Egypt till Solomon built the temple, six hundred and twelve years; but these years extended beyond the building of the temple, and to the end of the building of his own house, which took thirteen years, and the temple seven, which added to 592 amount to 612; for he says, Ant. 10, 9, 6, the first high priest at the temple which Solomon built was Zadoc; which seems to carry the idea that he did not officiate till the temple was built and finished, and probably his own house likewise.

I hope those who have misrepresented and denounced Josephus, on account of the chronology of his Antiquities, will carefully read this article and compare it with his history, and acknowledge that they have been too severe upon him, and commend him for what was no fault of his; and could we feel a brotherly charity towards him, we should make some effort to harmonize his numbers, and it is probable many more than are here manifested, might be harmonized in the same way, were we all willing to give what we should like to receive. And even if we could not bring all into harmony, we should not reproach him, but consider that he was not responsible for the errors of the original copies, nor for those that have crept in since his death; and therefore as a faithful copyist, he should be held altogether harmless, and his name be had in respectful remembrance for the history of the Sacred Volume, which he has kindly left behind him.

I do not say that this chronology of Josephus is infallible, but I do say he has given the most perfect chain of years, without gap or break, from the creation of Adam to the destruction of Jerusalem, that I have ever seen. One of its most special advantages is, it leaves neither chasm, nor doubling of the chain at the head of our vulgar era, but takes as direct a course for four thousand, two hundred and two years, as does the track of a railroad from one station to another; and supersedes the necessity of any era whatever; though the Grecian, Roman, and Nebonassarian eras were all used in his time, he has no need of either; nor of one single synchronism to complete his chain. To me it looks like a truthful history of years from the foundation of the world. My own feelings would prompt me to rejoice, could I find good evidence that the Lord would come at a much earlier date, than this chronology will admit; but I look in vain for proof of any other point than 1868, for the six thousandth year of the world. Still, when I look at the signs of the times I am reminded that the Lord is at hand; and sometimes can scarcely think of looking forward to the end of so great a period as eight long years; and as this chronology is not all inspired, every one that is wise will prepare to meet his God now, now, now; lest, coming suddenly, the Master find him unprepared.

"Reasons for my Hope."

The following is from Bro. Hastings' interesting work, entitled, "REASONS FOR MY HOPE." Every lover of truth should have a copy.—ED.

Our Savior has predicted, that at the time of his appearance, the world will be careless, and secure, and fearless of the coming of that day. "For as it was in the days that were before the flood; they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noah entered into the ark, and knew not until the flood came and took them all away; so SHALL ALSO THE COMING OF THE SON OF MAN BE." Matt. 24: 38, 39. And as in the days of Lot, "the same day that Lot went out of Sodom it rained fire and brimstone from heaven, and destroyed them all, even THUS SHALL IT BE in the day when the SON OF MAN IS REVEALED." Luke 28: 29.

And is not the world in just that state of careless slumber now? Is there not the same apathy and lethargy to-day? Do not worldliness, and lust, and pleasure, engross the minds of the multitudes now? Have not the world combined to sing of the "good time that's coming," and forget the duties that are present, and the dangers that are impending? Have not vast multitudes of the professed church united to tell what LUTHER called "a FALSEHOOD FORGED by SATAN, that he might darken sound doctrine;" namely: that "before the latter day all the WORLD shall become CHRISTIANS?" Locked in the security of worldly slumber, men heed not the approach of danger. And as the flood broke in upon their dreams, or as the fiery storm turned to deep wailing the riotous pleasure of the cities of the plain, even so "the day of the Lord" shall thunder its terror upon the careless and ungodly, who people the world at the completion of this age. Is not this wide-spread carelessness then a most solemn portent of approaching doom? While the wicked say with heart, and lips, and life, "there is no God"—"all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation,"—should not the humble and the prayerful [illegible] the day of the Lord, which "so cometh as a thief in the night," should overtake them in the general security? Let us [illegible] pray always, that we "may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man." Luke 21: 36. "A Father of the Fatherless."

Ps. 68 5.

Great God and wilt thou deign to bless
The lone heart of the fatherless?
Yea, wilt thou claim and call thine own
A child of earth unloved, disowned?

Will Jesus kindly bear the part
Of brother to the stricken heart,
That often yearns and sighs in vain
An earthly brother's love to claim?

O! will the Holy Spirit guide
Such strangers through this world of pride
With words of comfort, cheer, and bless
Them through life's dreary wilderness?

May all such sorrowing ones rejoice,
And upward raise th' imploring voice
To thee, as Father, Brother, Friend,
When clouds arise and storms descend.

And when the last great day is come,
The scattered flock is gathered home,
O! wilt thou give thine "own new name,"
And let them in thy kingdom reign?

Will Jesus wipe their tears away
In that eternal, glorious day,
And banish in that land of rest
The rugged "thorn" that tears the flesh?

Yea, thou hast said it in thy book,—
"Thy word is truth;" by faith we look
Beyond those clouds of doubt and fear,
And rest in peace and hope secure.

The promise sure is sealed in blood,
All that are his are known of God;
Without respect to birth or name,
The great and small have equal claim.

Turning the Other Cheek.

The instinct of retaliation in every creature is so manifest that it has given rise to the adage—"Tread on a worm and it will turn." In other words, there is no animal so contemptible or weak which will not offer resistance when pressed or trampled upon. The power of retaliation is widely different, but the principle is the same, whether it be in the majestic lion or the abominable rat. If there be an exception, I think it confined to the genus Ovis; and that too, to the female and the young. The sheep and lamb are used as examples of unresisting endurance, but the head of the family, the ram, is sometimes a very quarrelsome and vicious animal.

With his superior power of doing mischief there is no creature so quick at taking offence, and so eager for inflicting retribution as man. His pride, with its thousand sensitive feelers radiating from his corrupt heart, is ever ready to feel and avenge that which collides with his self-esteem, his interest, or his fame, or in speaking of the lowest degraded order of the race, where neither the former or the latter remains, a murder often is committed when only the brutal passions are excited and are clamorous for blood.

Among christians, even, there is sometimes a lack of forbearance, which taking offence at trifles which were better to have been left unheeded, retorts with open bitterness or covert sarcasm, and opens a wound which no unction but the balm of Gilead can heal; and which need not have existed at all, if the spirit of retaliation had been held in check by the grace of God. It was for the purpose of having this natural proclivity completely under subjection that Christ admonished his disciples, and exemplified his teachings by his own example, that they should bear every wrong and contumely with patience, eschewing all litigation and revenge, bearing their cause to Him to whom vengeance alone belongeth.

The act of smiting on the cheek, or plucking the beard, is considered the greatest indignity. To bear it without instant retaliation, among men, is considered cowardly in the extreme; and nothing but the most abject poltroonery, or the GRACE OF GOD, can arrest a man's hand in vindication of his outraged honor upon such provocation as that. But the doctrine of christianity, as taught by its divine Founder, insists upon a greater degree of humility than simple non-resistance, even the offering of the other cheek to the smiter.

This is an extreme case, but it shows to what a state of discipline the servant of God can and should be brought. There are comparatively few, in our day and generation, and in the land we live in, who are subjected to stripes and imprisonment for the cause of religion, although scoffs are many, and ridicule, almost as hard to endure as blows. These come from outsiders; but are there not too often, by a great deal, bickerings among ourselves, discussion with personalities, profitless because caustic, and creative only of hard feeling and dissension? In truth there is too much, if any; and we should endeavor to curb that spirit which would hurt a brother's feelings, even when we seek to do him good. A man must not use the scourge of cords as Christ did, unless he be like Christ—sinless. Let the suaviter in modo, go with the fortiter in re,—the brotherly kindness with the uncompromising rebuke.

There are some so combative, that in written argument or oral debate, they cross opinions as they would swords—every sentiment in abeyance but that of annihilating their opponent. I am sorry to say that this feeling is among my own numerous failings, and consequently I endeavor to keep out of discussion as much as possible.

Let each and all of us, then, when we feel it a duty to expose an error or correct a mistake, do it in the spirit of love and forbearance, remembering that we are of one family, and look forward to the time when we shall all assemble around our Father's table on that great day of thanksgiving and eternal praise. Let sympathy and charity prevail, rather pitying and mourning a brother's fall, or his wayward course, kindly counselling and reproving him; and not drag him like a criminal to our individual bar, calling in question his motives and his actions, and pronouncing upon him our own judgment and condemnation. Let our conduct be to each other what that of the early christians was, which wrung from their very executioners the exalted encomium—"Behold how these men love one another!"

Josephus' Age of the World

COMPARED WITH MY OWN COMPUTATIONS FROM CREATION.

Josephus, being the only historian uninspired, who has left behind him the sacred records, I feel a great deference towards his history, and a profound and solemn respect for the man, who has with all candor and faithfulness given us a record of events that have transpired in the world, which it would be impossible for us to obtain elsewhere. In some instances he presents the narrative in a manner plainer to be understood than the sacred texts themselves; not only so, but he leaves no chasm or gap unfilled, either at Joshua, anarchy, Judges or Samuel, nor even at the birth of Christ; but carries the whole history of events and periods in one unbroken chain of years, from the creation of Adam, to the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans. I believe he was a remarkable man of superior talents and acquirements, especially learned and skillful in the Hebrew language, of quick perception, and generally accurate in his computations, and as far as his records depend on his own authority only, he affirmed what he knew to be facts, and they should be received as the truth, as far as he was concerned, for he professes to give a just translation of their sacred books, without adding to or diminishing from the original copies, which we have no reason to disbelieve.

But his Antiquities contain a great many mistakes and evident omissions which he could not have made himself, and though it is evident that he drew some of his numbers from conflicting histories, this is no reason that all the errors and omissions of translators and copyists of his work since his death, should all be laid to him. His works have gone through hundreds and thousands of hands, and perhaps hundreds of editions, and copyists, translators, editors, and printers, have tumbled them over for nearly two thousand years, and this is sufficient to account for the errors they contain, and though I admit that he made some slight mistakes, yet all the gross errors, I must say, should not be laid to him, but to unseen causes. Josephus copied the Greek numbers of the Patriarchal age; but he adopted those of the Hebrew, in his age of the world. The numbers at the heads of his books are somewhat confused; especially the fifth and sixth books, for it is evident that forty years have been taken from the sixth and added to the fifth; that four hundred and thirty-six, instead of four hundred and seventy-six, should stand at the head of the fifth book; and that this forty years should be added to the thirty-two of the sixth book to make it seventy-two, instead of thirty-two; this the events of each book require.

His chronology stands at the head of his books of Antiquities, and is confirmed by assertions in the course of his history, which will be presented; and whatever agrees with the true years that head the book will be admitted, and whatever grossly disagrees with these years, will be repudiated, or unnoticed, and left as mistakes. That he adopts the Hebrew numbers in his age of the world may be seen in B. 8, C. 3, S. 1. There he says, "From Adam, the first man that was created, until Solomon built the temple, there had passed in all, three thousand, one hundred and two years," which is in accordance with the Hebrew, if any be allowed to Samuel. Again, B. 10, C. 9, S. 5, he says, from the generation of Adam, until this befell the temple, (i. e., when it was burned by Nebuchadnezzar,) there were three thousand, five hundred and thirteen years. By these assertions he repudiates the Greek or Septuagint numbers. Though he copies them in his first book, he never makes any use of them afterwards, and by this rejection, the authority of the numbers of his first book falls to the ground, and there he leaves them ever after.

His first book reaches to the death of Isaac, and in the arrangement of the number of years to the periods of some of the books of Antiquities, there is great want of order, though some of them are right Bible numbers, but they are generally so misplaced and huddled together, that their adjustment is extremely perplexing. Still it is necessary that they should, if possible, be put in some kind of order, and it is probable some, who have laughed at Josephus chronology, and called it a perfect jumble of years, will be surprised when they see the final result of his numbers, from the beginning of the world to the destruction of their city by Titus.

Book I. gives the same age to the first ten patriarchs at their death, as the Bible, but not the same at the birth of the patriarchal sons. After the flood, their age is not given so accurately, and in the book containing the Greek numbers they all amount to one thousand, five hundred and forty-four years more than the Hebrew, to the death of Isaac. But as Josephus only copied those numbers in his first book, but never made use of them afterwards, it will be as well for me to follow his example, and leave them where he left them, and make use of the Hebrew numbers only, not only from Isaac's death but from the creation. He fixes the anarchy and destruction of the Benjaminites between the death of Joshua and the first servitude under Chusan. To all the Judges but two, and to all the kings of Judah but one, he gives the same numbers as the inspired text. To Joshua he assigns twenty-five years, Ant. 5, 1, 29, to Samuel twelve, Ant. 6, 13, 5, "He went from year to year in circuit to Bethel and Gilgal and Mizpeh, and judged Israel in all those places, and his return was to Ramah, for there was his house, and there he judged Israel. "And when Samuel was old he made his sons judges." "And his sons walked not in his ways but turned aside after lucre, took bribes and perverted judgment. This provoked Israel to ask a king. How long they were suffered to plunder the people, before they became so enraged as to demand a king, we are not informed, but it was probably several years. It is very likely that Samuel here presided over the Israelites twelve years, as Josephus records, and all this was after the death of Eli, and after the ark of God had been returned to its place, by the Philistines, and had been in the house of Abinadab twenty years, and before Saul was anointed king, so that none of these years can possibly be assigned to Saul. We have the inspired text,—"God gave them Saul the son of Cis, a man of the tribe of Benjamin, by the space of forty years."—Acts 13 21. So that we have the same authority to assign full forty years to Saul, that we can have to David or Solomon.

In examining the Books of Antiquities from the end of the first book to the twentieth, I find but one very serious error as to the years at the heads of the books, and that occurs in the eleventh book between the first of Cyrus and the death of Alexander the Great; which gives an overplus of forty-one years and five months more than enough to fill the period; but we must recollect that there was no B. C. nor A. D. in the time of Josephus, to reckon to or from, and Josephus gave these numbers as he found them in the histories; but they are merely nominal years; i. e., they exist only in name, and not in reality; and this can at once be accounted for when we consider the conflicting statements of different historians, as to the length of the reign of some of the Medo-Persian kings, which will be noticed in due time. Book I. reaches to the death of Isaac; but I shall leave the first book as containing numbers of doubtful authority, and adopt the inspired Hebrew numbers to the epoch of Isaac's death. To the deluge 1657, to the call of Abraham 427, to the birth of Isaac 25, his age 180,—2289. I shall begin at the above epoch and count up all the years that I find at the heads of all his Books of Antiquities, from the end of the first book to the twentieth; feeling that I am discharging an imperative duty, in defending him from various misrepresentations, by giving a truthful view of the chronology of his history; which perhaps may not be without some interest and profit both, to those who have any taste for the chronology of the world. I shall give all the years from the above epoch to the last book inclusive, but the extra forty-one, and these will be placed in such a position that all can see that they can have no place where they seem to be located; and that they were inserted by mistake, made by computing erroneous numbers to some of the kings of Persia.

We know that the histories from whence Josephus drew numbers of the years of the Medo-Persian kings were not all right, by his giving more years to Xerxes than he ever reigned. On p. 227, Ant. XI, 6, 7, he speaks of "the 25th of Xerxes", and in the next Sec., after Nehemiah had built the walls of Jerusalem, which took two years and four months, he says, they were built in the 28th year of Xerxes, which is seven years more than he actually reigned, for I know of no one now that assigns to him any more than twenty-one years, and I have often seen in ancient histories forty-nine or fifty years assigned to Artaxerxes, whereas he reigned no more than forty-one years. Here are nine years too many set to Artaxerxes, which in the reigns of these two kings amount to sixteen years more than they reigned. Cyrus also is often said to have reigned thirty years, but he reigned only seven after the end of the Babylonish captivity. Now here are twenty-three years more to be added to the before-mentioned sixteen, which all amount to thirty-nine years, out of the foregoing forty-one, leaving but two years unaccounted for, and it would be no difficult task to find the other two, were we in possession of those ancient histories, and as these nominal years are found in the discordant histories of those times, it leaves the copyist harmless, for he says he gave them as he found them.

It is a mathematical demonstration, that between the first of Cyrus, B. C. 536 and the death of Alexander the Great, B. C. 324, no more than 212 years could ever elapse, and I think it an act of justice to a great and useful man to remove every obstruction from the chronology of his history, so extensively beneficial to mankind, and I think I shall be sustained by every well-informed individual who knows of those conflicting numbers assigned to those kings, and who also know that there is no latitude here for them to exist. In comparing numbers, I shall put the years of several of his books together, as they will harmonize better, and in my own computations I shall assign twelve years to Samuel and forty to Saul. In other respects I shall not materially differ from Bliss' Anal. Sac. Chron.

Book I. closes with the death of Isaac, to which time I feel justified in assigning to Josephus the inspired Hebrew numbers; not because I believe they are right and the Septuagint wrong, but because he himself repudiated the Greek numbers, and adopted the Hebrew repeatedly, as has been shown (and probably will be again in due time), from the creation of Adam for several thousand years, in recording the age of the world, which proves that though he copied the Septuagint, he had no use for it afterwards. I shall therefore set to him the same number of years as to myself at the epoch of Isaac's death, the same which the Hebrew Scriptures give, it being A. M. 2289. I shall give the comparison in a table of two columns. The first will give Josephus' numbers, at the head of his books, as the outline and foundation of his chronology. The second will give my own computations.

CHRONOLOGICAL TABLE.

	His.	Mine.
Inspired Hebrew numbers to the epoch of Isaac's death	2289	2289
Book 2d gives a period of two hundred and twenty years from the death of Isaac to the exodus out of Egypt, which is five less than I make. I make two hundred and twenty-five in this period. How this five years could be removed from this period cannot be accounted for, for Jacob was 120 years old when his father Isaac died, having been born when his father was 60, and when Jacob, at the call of his son Joseph, stood before the king of Egypt, he was 130 years old; which was ten years after Isaac's death; and the sojourn of Jacob and his sons in Egypt was two hundred and fifteen years, to which add the foregoing ten, and we have two hundred and twenty-five years. But these five years are not lost; we shall find them in the course of the era.	220	225
Books 3d and 4th give a period of forty years in the wilderness. I give this as a Bible number, to the death and mourning for Moses.	40	40
Here, from the exode, begins Josephus period of 592 years, to the temple. Books 5th and 6th give a period of five hundred and eight years from the death of Moses to the death of Saul. As this period assigns twelve years to Samuel, and forty to Saul, I shall adopt the same number.	508	508
Book 7th gives forty years from the death of Saul to the death of David. As this is an inspired number, I give the same. At the fourth year of Solomon, we find Josephus' period full, of five hundred and ninety-two years current, made up as follows. In the wilderness 40, to the death of Saul 508, to the death of David 40, to the 4th of Solomon 4—592 in all. If we now add the years anterior to the death of Jacob, (2289) and his number between that time and the exode (220), to the 592 years, we have his age of the world at the building of the temple, three thousand one hundred and one years; and though he elsewhere sums it up as 3102, that one year was probably a mistake in casting his figures. My own computations to the temple amount to three thousand one hundred and six, and it will be seen that had he not left out the five years that belong to the period between the death of Isaac and the exode, my numbers would not have exceeded his, for both would have been 3106. But as it is, he only antedates the building of the temple, five years, for we shall overtake these missing years yet.	40	40
Books 8th, 9th, 10th, respectively give the following years: 163, 157, 182 1-2—in all five hundred and two and a half years, from the death of David to the first of Cyrus, which is eight and a half more than I make. David died about B. C. 1030, 1st of Cyrus B. C. 536, I make this period but	502 1-2	494
Book 11th contains the dreaded mistake giving the record of two hundred and fifty-three years and five months, between the first of Cyrus and the death of Alexander the Great,—forty-one years too many. The space between the 1st of Cyrus B. C. 536, and the death of Alexander B. C. 324, is two hundred and twelve years. I shall fill it as full as it will hold, and for the reasons already given, leave the forty-one false years out of the amount.	212	212
Books 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, respectively give the following years: 170, 82, 32, 18, 12, 14—in all 328 years from the death of Alexander to the banishment of Archelaus. Alexander died B. C. 324, and Archelaus' dethronement was in A. D. 10. This is six years less than I make. I make the years of this period three hundred and thirty four.	328	334
Books 18th, 19th, 20th, respectively give the following years: 32, 3 1-2, 22—in all 57 1-2 from the fall of Archelaus to the first year of Gessius Florus. Florus began his administration as governor of Judea in the year of Nero, and by overbearing mismanagement and violent injustice he drove the Jews to madness, and necessitated them to take up arms against the Romans in his second year, which was the 12th of Nero. Ant. B. 20, C. 11, S. 1. Nero lived three years after Florus came into Judea, his whole reign being 14 years. Galba, Otho and Vitellius contended for empire some six or eight months, when Vespasian was proclaimed emperor of Rome, in whose second year, Jerusalem was destroyed.—Jewish Wars, 6, 10, 1. If we add three numbers, 57 1-2, 3, 2, they equal 62 1-2, which is 2 1-2 years more than I make. The Vulgar era gives A. D. 70 for the date of the destruction of Jerusalem. Archelaus fell A. D. 10, there remains sixty years.	62 1-2	60
The foregoing table will show the result of Josephus' age of the world from the creation to the fall of the Jewish nation under the Romans. In the period between the death of Isaac and the exode he gives five years less than I do, and also between the death of Alexander and the fall of Archelaus he gives six years less, but this loss is counterbalanced by the gain of a like number of years in other periods, for between the death of David and the first of Cyrus, he gives eight and a half more years than I do, and two and a half years between the fall of Archelaus and the destruction of the city, more than I do, so that the gain is equal to the loss, which leaves them strikingly counterpoised, with eleven years in each scale. I have assigned twelve years to Samuel, and in no other instance have I differed from Bliss' Anal. Sac. Chron. I have given all the years and half years to be found in all his books of Antiquities beyond the first, (with the exception of those forty-one skeleton years, so abundantly shown to be a false estimate,) from the death of Isaac, to which point the inspired Hebrew numbers were attached, to the fall of Jerusalem, and it is a remarkable coincidence that by assigning twelve years to Samuel, my computations are exactly in accordance with those of Josephus. From the creation of the world, we both concur in assigning four thousand, two hundred and two years, as the age of the world when Jerusalem was destroyed.	4202	4202
we have four thousand one hundred and thirty-two for the age of the world at the birth of Christ;	4132	4132
and if we add 1860,	1860	1860
we find that we are now living in the five thousand nine hundred and ninety-second year of the world.	5992	5992

This chronology of Josephus I think may, as much as any thing human, be relied on. There is not a gap nor a break in the whole chain, from the death of Isaac to the fall of Jerusalem; and we have the inspired Hebrew numbers without a break, up to Isaac's death. There are some slight mistakes, it is true; but nothing that amounts to the weight of a feather as to the result. As I wish to have all see and understand the numbers contained in Josephus' period of five hundred and ninety-two years, between the exode and the temple, I will give a table of the numbers contained in it, with the authority on which each number is based.

It will be seen by the above table that the time of the Elders and anarchy is not a given number, either in the Bible or Josephus, all the given numbers in both amount to 572 years, and as the period twenty years is required to fill the period, we suppose that the time of the Elders that overlived Joshua, and the anarchy that followed their death, to amount to just twenty years. Nor does Josephus give the seven years servitude under Midian, nor Toba's twenty-three, nor Abdon's eight, nor Saul's forty, but it is here shown that all these given numbers of Josephus, together with Joshua's twenty-five, and Samuel's twelve, and all the given numbers in the Bible from the time they left Egypt, till Solomon began to build the temple, in the 4th year of his reign, are all included in this period, and then the twenty for anarchy is required to fill it. And if from Joshua's twenty-five, we deduct six for division of land, we have nineteen years left to Joshua. Then allow twenty for anarchy, 391 for Judges and servitude, including the times of Samson, Eli and Ruth, and twenty to the day of Mizpeh, and we have Paul's 450 to Samuel the prophet.—Acts 13: 20. So that the twenty years set to anarchy is required to fill Paul's period of 450 years, from the division of the land, to the day when Samuel called them to Mizpeh.

I have now shown the basis and sum of Josephus' age of the world which, if anything can be depended on that is human as a truthful chronology, I think his can, for he lived nearly two thousand years ago, and probably had access to all the histories then extant, and to all the sacred writings, and after the desolation and destruction of his people, he had time enough, and being a ripe scholar, well versed in mathematics, a man of moderation, of a studious turn, and of clear perception, he was the very man to give us this history and chronology. He was keenly alive to everything that related to his people; always ready to expose error in any form, without favoring the errors of his own people, or excusing their faults, and never exaggerating the faults of his enemies. One of his greatest graces was his patience in investigating what he supposed to be truth, as well as his indefatigable labor in compiling a history of such magnitude, and his generosity in presenting it to future generations.

His Antiquities contain mistakes and omissions, which he could not have made himself; and every candid individual, I trust, will absolve Josephus from the gross errors that have crept into his history; and cease to quote him as authority for the spurious numbers that may be found there, which are at variance with what is here presented as his chronology. It is true, he says the first thirteen high priests held the government from the time they left Egypt till Solomon built the temple, six hundred and twelve years; but these years extended beyond the building of the temple, and to the end of the building of his own house, which took thirteen years, and the temple seven, which added to 592 amount to 612; for he says, Ant. 10, 9, 6, the first high priest at the temple which Solomon built was Zadoc; which seems to carry the idea that he did not officiate till the temple was built and finished, and probably his own house likewise.

I hope those who have misrepresented and denounced Josephus, on account of the chronology of his Antiquities, will carefully read this article and compare it with his history, and acknowledge that they have been too severe upon him, and condemned him for what was no fault of his; and could we feel a brotherly charity towards him, we should make some effort to harmonize his numbers, and it is probable many more than are here manifested, might be harmonized in the same way, were we all willing to give what we should like to receive. And even if we could not bring all into harmony, we should not reproach him, but consider that he was not responsible for the errors of the original copies, nor for those that have crept in since his death; and therefore as a faithful copyist, he should be held altogether harmless, and his name be had in respectful remembrance for the history of the Sacred Volume, which he has kindly left behind him.

I do not say that this chronology of Josephus is infallible, but I do say he has given the most perfect chain of years, without gap or break, from the creation of Adam to the destruction of Jerusalem, that I have ever seen. One of its most special advantages is, it leaves neither chasm, nor doubling of the chain at the head of our vulgar era, but takes as direct a course for four thousand, two hundred and two years, as does the track of a railroad from one station to another; and supersedes the necessity of any era whatever; though the Grecian, Roman, and Nebunassarian eras were all used in his time, he has no need of either; nor of one single synchronism to complete his chain. To me it looks like a truthful history of years from the foundation of the world. My own feelings would prompt me to rejoice, could I find good evidence that the Lord would come at a much earlier date, than this chronology will admit; but I look in vain for proof of any other point than 1868, for the six thousandth year of the world. Still, when I look at the signs of the times I am reminded that the Lord is at hand; and sometimes can scarcely think of looking forward to the end of so great a period as eight long years; and as this chronology is not all inspired, every one that is wise will prepare to meet his God now, now, now; lest, coming suddenly, the Master find him unprepared.

"Reasons for my Hope."

The following is from Bro. Hastings' interesting work, entitled, "REASONS FOR MY HOPE." Every lover of truth should have a copy.—ED.

Our Savior has predicted, that at the time of his appearance, the world will be careless, and secure, and fearless of the coming of that day. "For as it was in the days that were before the flood; they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noah entered into the ark, and knew not until the flood came and took them all away; SO SHALL ALSO THE COMING OF THE SON OF MAN BE." Matt. 24: 38, 39. And as in the days of Lot, "the same day that Lot went out of Sodom it rained fire and brimstone from heaven, and destroyed them all, even THUS SHALL IT BE in the day when the SON OF MAN IS REVEALED." Luke 23: 29.

And is not the world in just that state of careless slumber now? Is there not the same apathy and lethargy to-day? Do not worldliness, and lust, and pleasure, engross the minds of the multitudes now? Have not the world combined to sing of the "good time that's coming," and forget the duties that are present, and the dangers that are impending? Have not vast multitudes of the professed church united to tell what LUTHER called "A FALSEHOOD FORGED by SATAN, that he might darken sound doctrine;" namely: that "before the latter day all the WORLD shall become CHRISTIANS?" Locked in the security of worldly slumber, men heed not the approach of danger. And as the flood broke in upon their dreams, or as the fiery storm turned to deep wailing the riotous pleasure of the cities of the plain, even so "the day of the Lord" shall thunder its terror upon the careless and ungodly, who people the world at the completion of this age. Is not this wide-spread carelessness then a most solemn portent of approaching doom? While the wicked say with heart, and lips, and life, "there is no God"—"all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation,"—should not the humble and the prayerful [illegible] the day of the Lord, which "so cometh as a thief in the night," should overtake them in the general security? Let us watch and pray always, that we "may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man." Luke 21: 36. In the language of Mathew Henry on 2 Peter 3: "That time which men think to be the most improper and unlikely, and therefore are the most secure, will be the time of the Lord's coming. Let us then beware [illegible] our thoughts and imaginings [illegible] far away from us; [illegible] to be so much nearer in reality [illegible] much further off it is in the [illegible] ungodly world."

"A Father of the Fatherless."

Ps. 68: 5.

Great God and wilt thou deign to bless
The lone heart of the fatherless?
Yea, wilt thou claim and call thine own
A child of earth unloved, disowned?

Will Jesus kindly bear the part
Of brother to the stricken heart,
That often yearns and sighs in vain
An earthly brother's love to claim?

O! will the Holy Spirit guide
Such strangers through this world of pride
With words of comfort, cheer, and bless
Them through life's dreary wilderness?

May all such sorrowing ones rejoice,
And upward raise th' imploring voice
To thee, as Father, Brother, Friend,
When clouds arise and storms descend.

And when the last great day is come,
The scattered flock is gathered home,
Oh! wilt thou give thine "own new name,"
And let them in thy kingdom reign?

Will Jesus wipe their tears away
In that eternal, glorious day,
And banish in that land of rest
The rugged "thorn" that tears the flesh?

Yea, thou hast said it in thy book,—
"Thy word is truth;" by faith we look
Beyond these clouds of doubt and fear,
And rest in peace and hope secure.

The promise sure is sealed in blood,
All that are his are known of God;
Without respect to birth or name,
The great and small have equal claim.

Turning the Other Cheek.

The instinct of retaliation in every creature is so manifest that it has given rise to the adage—"Tread on a worm and it will turn." In other words, there is no animal so contemptible or weak which will not offer resistance when pressed or trampled upon. The power of retaliation is widely different, but the principle is the same, whether it be in the majestic lion or the abominable rat. If there be an exception, I think it confined to the genus Ovis; and that too, to the female and the young. The sheep and lamb are used as examples of unresisting endurance; but the head of the family, the ram, is sometimes a very quarrelsome and vicious animal.

With his superior power of doing mischief there is no creature so quick at taking offence, and so eager for inflicting retribution as man. His pride, with its thousand sensitive feelers radiating from his corrupt heart, is ever ready to feel and avenge that which collides with his self-esteem, his interest, or his fame; or in speaking of the lowest degraded order of the race, where neither the former or the latter remains, a murder often is committed when only the brutal passions are excited and are clamorous for blood.

Among christians, even, there is sometimes a lack of forbearance, which taking offence at trifles which were better to have been left unheeded, retorts with open bitterness or covert sarcasm, and opens a wound which no unction but the balm of Gilead can heal; and which need not have existed at all, if the spirit of retaliation had been held in check by the grace of God. It was for the purpose of having this natural proclivity completely under subjection that Christ admonished his disciples, and exemplified his teachings by his own example, that they should bear every wrong and contumely with patience, eschewing all litigation and revenge, bearing their cause to Him to whom vengeance alone belongeth.

The act of smiting on the cheek, or plucking the beard, is considered the greatest indignity. To bear it without instant retaliation, among men, is considered cowardly in the extreme; and nothing but the most abject poltroonry, or the GRACE OF GOD, can arrest a man's hand in vindication of his outraged honor upon such provocation as that. But the doctrine of christianity, as taught by its divine Founder, insists upon a greater degree of humility than simple non-resistance, even the offering of the other cheek to the smiter.

This is an extreme case, but it shows to what a state of discipline the servant of God can and should be brought. There are comparatively few in our day and generation, and in the land we live in, who are subjected to stripes and imprisonment for the cause of religion, although scoffs are many, and ridicule, almost as hard to endure as blows. These come from outsiders; but are there not too often, by a great deal, bickerings among ourselves, discussion with personalities, profitless because caustic, and creative only of hard feeling and dissension? In truth there is too much, if any; and we should endeavor to curb that spirit which would hurt a brother's feelings, even when we seek to do him good. A man must not use the scourge of cords as Christ did, unless he be like Christ—sinless. Let the suaviter in modo, go with the fortiter in re,—the brotherly kindness with the uncompromising rebuke.

There are some so combative, that in written argument or oral debate, they cross opinions as they would swords—every sentiment in abeyance but that of annihilating their opponent. I am sorry to say that this feeling is among my own numerous failings, and consequently I endeavor to keep out of discussion as much as possible.

Let each and all of us, then, when we feel it a duty to expose an error or correct a mistake, do it in the spirit of love and forbearance, remembering that we are of one family, and look forward to the time when we shall all assemble around our Father's table on that great day of thanksgiving and eternal praise. Let sympathy and charity prevail, rather pitying and mourning a brother's fall, or his wayward course, kindly counselling and reproving him; and not drag him like a criminal to our individual bar, calling in question his motives and his actions, and pronouncing upon him our own judgment and condemnation. Let our conduct be to each other what that of the early christians was, which wrung from their very executioners the exalted encomium—"Behold how these men love one another!"

Josephus' Age of the World:

COMPARED WITH MY OWN COMPUTATIONS FROM CREATION.

Josephus, being the only historian uninspired, who has left behind him the sacred records, I feel a great deference towards his history, and a profound and solemn respect for the man, who has with all candor and faithfulness given us a record of events that have transpired in the world, which it would be impossible for us to obtain elsewhere. In some instances he presents the narrative in a manner plainer to be understood than the sacred texts themselves; not only so, but he leaves no chasm or gap unfilled, either at Joshua, anarchy, Judges or Samuel; nor even at the birth of Christ; but carries the whole history of events and periods in one unbroken chain of years, from the creation of Adam, to the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans. I believe he was a remarkable man, of superior talents and acquirements, especially learned and skillful in the Hebrew language; of quick perception, and generally accurate in his computations; and as far as his records depend on his own authority only, he affirmed what he knew to be facts; and they should be received as the truth, as far as he was concerned; for he professes to give a just translation of their sacred books, without adding to or diminishing from the original copies; which we have no reason to disbelieve.

But his Antiquities contain a great many mistakes and evident omissions which he could not have made himself; and though it is evident that he drew some of his numbers from conflicting histories, this is no reason that all the errors and omissions of translators and copyists of his work since his death, should all be laid to him. His works have gone through hundreds and thousands of hands, and perhaps hundreds of editions; and copyists, translators, editors, and printers, have tumbled them over for nearly two thousand years; and this is sufficient to account for the errors they contain; and though I admit that he made some slight mistakes, yet all the gross errors, I must say, should not be laid to him, but to unseen causes. Josephus copied the Greek numbers of the Patriarchal age; but he adopted those of the Hebrew, in his age of the world. The numbers at the heads of his books are somewhat confused; especially the fifth and sixth books, for it is evident that forty years have been taken from the sixth and added to the fifth; that four hundred and thirty-six, instead of four hundred and seventy-six, should stand at the head of the fifth book; and that this forty years should be added to the thirty-two of the sixth book to make it seventy-two, instead of thirty-two; this the events of each book require.

His chronology stands at the head of his books of Antiquities, and is confirmed by [illegible] in the course of his history, which will be presented; and whatever agrees with the true years that head the book will be admitted; and whatever grossly disagrees with these years, will be repudiated, or unnoticed, and left as mistakes. That he adopts the Hebrew numbers in his age of the world may be seen in B. 8, C. 3, S. 1. There he says, "From Adam, the first man that was created, until Solomon built the temple, there had passed in all, three thousand, one hundred and two years," which is in accordance with the Hebrew, if any be allowed to Samuel. Again, B. 10, C. 9, S. 5, he says, from the generation of Adam, until this befell the temple, (i. e., when it was burned by Nebuchadnezzar,) there were three thousand, five hundred and thirteen years. By these assertions he repudiates the Greek or Septuagint numbers. Though he copies them in his first book, he never makes any use of them afterwards; and by this rejection, the authority of the numbers of his first book falls to the ground, and there he leaves them ever after.

His first book reaches to the death of Isaac; and in the arrangement of the number of years to the periods of some of the books of Antiquities, there is great want of order, though some of them are right Bible numbers; but they are generally so misplaced and huddled together, that their adjustment is extremely perplexing. Still it is necessary that they should, if possible, be put in some kind of order; and it is probable some, who have laughed at Josephus' chronology, and called it a perfect jumble of years, will be surprised when they see the final result of his numbers, from the beginning of the world to the destruction of their city by Titus.

Book I. gives the same age to the first ten patriarchs at their death, as the Bible; but not the same at the birth of the patriarchal sons. After the flood, their age is not given so accurately; and in the book containing the Greek numbers they all amount to one thousand, five hundred and forty-four years more than the Hebrew, to the death of Isaac. But as Josephus only copied those numbers in his first book, but never made use of them afterwards; it will be as well for me to follow his example, and leave them where he left them, and make use of the Hebrew numbers only, not only from Isaac's death but from the creation. He fixes the anarchy and destruction of the Benjaminites between the death of Joshua and the first servitude under Chusan. To all the Judges but two, and to all the kings of Judah but one, he gives the same numbers as the inspired text. To Joshua he assigns twenty-five years, Ant. 5, 1, 29; to Samuel twelve, Ant. 6, 13, 5. "He went from year to year in circuit to Bethel and Gilgal and Mizpeh, and judged Israel in all those places; and his return was to Ramah, for there was his house, and there he judged Israel." "And when Samuel was old he made his sons judges." "And his sons walked not in his ways but turned aside after lucre, took bribes and perverted judgment." This provoked Israel to ask a king. How long they were suffered to plunder the people, before they became so enraged as to demand a king, we are not informed; but it was probably several years. It is very likely that Samuel here presided over the Israelites twelve years, as Josephus records; and all this was after the death of Eli, and after the ark of God had been returned to its place, by the Philistines, and had been in the house of Abinadab twenty years, and before Saul was anointed king; so that none of these years can possibly be assigned to Saul. We have the inspired text,—"God gave them Saul the son of Cis, a man of the tribe of Benjamin, by the space of forty years."—Acts 13: 21. So that we have the same authority to assign full forty years to Saul, that we can have to David or Solomon.

In examining the Books of Antiquities from the end of the first book to the twentieth, I find but one very serious error as to the years at the heads of the books; and that occurs in the eleventh book between the first of Cyrus and the death of Alexander the Great; which gives an overplus of forty-one years and five months more than enough to fill the period; but we must recollect that there was no B. C. nor A. D. in the time of Josephus, to reckon to or from, and Josephus gave these numbers as he found them in the histories; but they are merely nominal years; i. e., they exist only in name, and not in reality; and this can at once be accounted for when we consider the conflicting statements of different historians, as to the length of the reign of some of the Medo-Persian kings, which will be noticed in due time. Book I. reaches to the death of Isaac; but I shall leave the first book as containing numbers of doubtful authority, and adopt the inspired Hebrew numbers to the epoch of Isaac's death.

To the deluge 1657, to the call of Abraham 427, to the birth of Isaac 25, his age 180,—2289. I shall begin at the above epoch and count up all the years that I find at the heads of all his Books of Antiquities, from the end of the first book to the twentieth; feeling that I am discharging an imperative duty, in defending him from various misrepresentations, by giving a truthful view of the chronology of his history; which perhaps may not be without some interest and profit both, to those who have any taste for the chronology of the world. I shall give all the years from the above epoch to the last book inclusive, but the extra forty-one, and these will be placed in such a position that all can see that they can have no place where they seem to be located; and that they were inserted by mistake, made by computing erroneous numbers to some of the kings of Persia.

We know that the histories from whence Josephus drew numbers of the years of the Medo-Persian kings were not all right, by his giving more years to Xerxes than he ever reigned. On p. 227, Ant. XI, 6, 7, he speaks of "the 25th of Xerxes"; and in the next Sec., after Nehemiah had built the walls of Jerusalem, which took two years and four months, he says, they were built in the 28th year of Xerxes; which is seven years more than he actually reigned; for I know of no one now that assigns to him any more than twenty-one years; and I have often seen in ancient histories forty-nine or fifty years assigned to Artaxerxes, whereas he reigned no more than forty-one years. Here are nine years too many set to Artaxerxes, which in the reigns of these two kings amount to sixteen years more than they reigned. Cyrus also is often said to have reigned thirty years; but he reigned only seven after the end of the Babylonish captivity. Now here are twenty-three years more to be added to the before-mentioned sixteen, which all amount to thirty-nine years, out of the foregoing forty-one, leaving but two years unaccounted for; and it would be no difficult task to find the other two, were we in possession of those ancient histories; and as these nominal years are found in the discordant histories of those times, it leaves the copyist harmless; for he says he gave them as he found them.

It is a mathematical demonstration, that between the first of Cyrus, B. C. 536, and the death of Alexander the Great, B. C. 324, no more than 212 years could ever elapse; and I think it an act of justice to a great and useful man to remove every obstruction from the chronology of his history, so extensively beneficial to mankind; and I think I shall be sustained by every well-informed individual who knows of those conflicting numbers assigned to those kings, and who also know that there is no latitude here for them to exist. In comparing numbers, I shall put the years of several of his books together, as they will harmonize better, and in my own computations I shall assign twelve years to Samuel and forty to Saul. In other respects I shall not materially differ from Bliss' Anal. Sac. Chron.

Book I. closes with the death of Isaac, to which time I feel justified in assigning to Josephus the inspired Hebrew numbers; not because I believe they are right and the Septuagint wrong; but because he himself repudiated the Greek numbers, and adopted the Hebrew repeatedly; as has been shown (and probably will be again in due time), from the creation of Adam for several thousand years, in recording the age of the world; which proves that though he copied the Septuagint, he had no use for it afterwards. I shall therefore set to him the same number of years as to myself at the epoch of Isaac's death; the same which the Hebrew Scriptures give, it being A. M. 2289. I shall give the comparison in a table of two columns. The first will give Josephus' numbers, at the head of his books, as the outline and foundation of his chronology. The second will give my own computations.

CHRONOLOGICAL TABLE.

	His.	Mine.
Inspired Hebrew numbers to the epoch of Isaac's death	2289	2289
Book 2d gives a period of two hundred and twenty years from the death of Isaac to the exodus out of Egypt, which is five less than I make.	220
I make two hundred and twenty-five in this period.		225
How this five years could be removed from this period cannot be accounted for; for Jacob was 120 years old when his father Isaac died, having been born when his father was 60; and when Jacob, at the call of his son Joseph, stood before the king of Egypt, he was 130 years old; which was ten years after Isaac's death; and the sojourn of Jacob and his sons in Egypt was two hundred and fifteen years, to which add the foregoing ten, and we have two hundred and twenty-five years. But these five years are not lost; we shall find them in the course of the era. Books 3d and 4th give a period of forty years in the wilderness. I give this as a Bible number, to the [illegible].	40	40
Here, from the exode, begins Josephus' period of 592 years, to the temple. Books 5th and 6th give a period of five hundred and eight years from the death of Moses to the death of Saul	508
As this period assigns twelve years to Samuel, and forty to Saul, I shall adopt the same number.		508
Book 7th gives forty years from the death of Saul to the death of David	40
As this is an inspired number, I give the same.		40
At the fourth year of Solomon, we find Josephus' period full, of five hundred and ninety-two years current, made up as follows: In the wilderness 40, to the death of Saul 508, to the death of David 40, to the 4th of Solomon 4—592 in all. If we now add the years anterior to the death of Jacob, (2289) and his number between that time and the exode (220), to the 592 years, we have his age of the world at the building of the temple, three thousand one hundred and one years; and though he elsewhere sums it up as 3102, that one year was probably a mistake in casting his figures. My own computations to the temple amount to three thousand one hundred and six; and it will be seen that had he not left out the five years that belong to the period between the death of Isaac and the exode, my numbers would not have exceeded his, for both would have been 3106. But as it is, he only antedates the building of the temple, five years; for we shall overtake these missing years yet.
Books 8th, 9th, 10th, respectively give the following years: 163, 137, 182 1-2—in all five hundred and two and a half years, from the death of David to the first of Cyrus, which is eight and a half more than I make.	502 1-2
David died about B. C. 1030; 1st of Cyrus B. C. 536; I make this period but		494
Book 11th contains the dreaded mistake giving the record of two hundred and fifty-three years and five months, between the first of Cyrus and the death of Alexander the Great,—forty-one years too many. The space between the 1st of Cyrus B. C. 536, and the death of Alexander B. C. 324, is two hundred and twelve years. I shall fill it as full as it will hold, and for the reasons already given, leave the forty-one false years out of the amount.	212	212
Books 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, respectively give the following years: 170, 82, 32, 18, 12, 14—in all 328 years from the death of Alexander to the banishment of Archelaus. Alexander died B. C. 324, and Archelaus' dethronement was in A. D. 10. This is six years less than I make.	328
I make the years of this period three hundred and thirty-four.		334
Books 18th, 19th, 20th, respectively give the following years: 32, 3 1-2, 22—in all 57 1-2 from the fall of Archelaus to the first year of Gessius Florus. Florus began his administration as governor of Judea in the year of Nero; and by overbearing mismanagement and violent injustice he drove the Jews to madness, and necessitated them to take up arms against the Romans in his second year; which was the 12th of Nero. Ant B 20, C. 11, S. 1. Nero lived three years after Florus came into Judea; his whole reign being 14 years. Galba, Otho and Vitellius contended for empire some six or eight months, when Vespasian was proclaimed emperor of Rome, in whose second year, Jerusalem was destroyed.—Jewish Wars, 6, 10, 1. If we add three numbers, 57 1-2, 3, 2, they equal 62 1-2, which is 2 1-2 years more than I make.	62 1-2
The Vulgar era gives A. D. 70 for the date of the destruction of Jerusalem. Archelaus fell A. D. 10,—there remains sixty years.		60
The foregoing table will show the result of Josephus' age of the world from the creation to the fall of the Jewish nation under the Romans. In the period between the death of Isaac and the exode he gives five years less than I do; and also between the death of Alexander and the fall of Archelaus he gives six years less; but this loss is counterbalanced by the gain of a like number of years in other periods; for between the death of David and the first of Cyrus, he gives eight and a half more years than I do; and two and a half years between the fall of Archelaus and the destruction of the city, more than I do; so that the gain is equal to the loss; which leaves them strikingly counterpoised, with eleven years in each scale. I have assigned twelve years to Samuel; and in no other instance have I differed from Bliss' Anal. Sac. Chron. I have given all the years and half years to be found in all his books of Antiquities beyond the first, (with the exception of those forty-one skeleton years, so abundantly shown to be a false estimate,) from the death of Isaac, to which point the inspired Hebrew numbers were attached, to the fall of Jerusalem; and it is a remarkable coincidence that by assigning twelve years to Samuel, my computations are exactly in accordance with those of Josephus. From the creation of the world, we both concur in assigning four thousand, two hundred and two years, as the age of the world when Jerusalem was destroyed.	4202	4202
From which, if we deduct 70,	70	70
we have four thousand one hundred and thirty-two, for the age of the world at the birth of Christ;	4132	4132
and if we add 1860,	1860	1860
we find that we are now living in the five thousand, nine hundred and ninety-second year of the world.	5992	5992

This chronology of Josephus I think may, as much as any thing human, be relied on. There is not a gap nor a break in the whole chain, from the death of Isaac to the fall of Jerusalem; and we have the inspired Hebrew numbers without a break, up to Isaac's death. There are some slight mistakes, it is true; but nothing that amounts to the weight of a feather as to the result. As I wish to have all see and understand the numbers contained in Josephus' period of five hundred and ninety-two years, between the exode and the temple, I will give a table of the numbers contained in it, with the authority on which each number is based.

It will be seen by the above table that the time of the Elders and anarchy is not a given number, either in the Bible or Josephus; all the given numbers in both amount to 572 years; and as the period twenty years is required to fill the period, we suppose that the time of the Elders that overlived Joshua, and the anarchy that followed their death, to amount to just twenty years. Nor does Josephus give the seven years servitude under Midian, nor Toba's twenty-three, nor Abdon's eight, nor Saul's forty; but it is here shown that all these given numbers of Josephus, together with Joshua's twenty-five, and Samuel's twelve; and all the given numbers in the Bible from the time they left Egypt, till Solomon began to build the temple, in the 4th year of his reign, are all included in this period; and then the twenty for anarchy is required to fill it. And if from Joshua's twenty-five, we deduct six for division of land, we have nineteen years left to Joshua. Then allow twenty for anarchy, 391 for Judges and servitude, including the times of Samson, Eli and Ruth, and twenty to the day of Mizpeh, and we have Paul's 450 to Samuel the prophet.—Acts 13: 20. So that the twenty years set to anarchy is required to fill Paul's period of 450 years, from the division of the land, to the day when Samuel called them to Mizpeh.

I have now shown the basis and sum of Josephus' age of the world which, if anything can be depended on that is human as a truthful chronology, I think his can; for he lived nearly two thousand years ago, and probably had access to all the histories then extant, and to all the sacred writings; and after the desolation and destruction of his people, he had time enough; and being a ripe scholar, well versed in mathematics, a man of moderation, of a studious turn, and of clear perception, he was the very man to give us this history and chronology. He was keenly alive to everything that related to his people; always ready to expose error in any form, without favoring the errors of his own people, or excusing their faults; and never exaggerating the faults of his enemies. One of his greatest graces was his patience in investigating what he supposed to be truth; as well as his indefatigable labor in compiling a history of such magnitude, and his generosity in presenting it to future generations.

His Antiquities contain mistakes and omissions, which he could not have made himself; and every candid individual, I trust, will absolve Josephus from the gross errors that have crept into his history; and cease to quote him as authority for the spurious numbers that may be found there, which are at variance with what is here presented as his chronology. It is true, he says the first thirteen high priests held the government from the time they left Egypt till Solomon built the temple, six hundred and twelve years; but these years extended beyond the building of the temple, and to the end of the building of his own house, which took thirteen years, and the temple seven, which added to 592 amount to 612; for he says, Ant. 10, 9, 6, the first high priest at the temple which Solomon built was Zadoc; which seems to carry the idea that he did not officiate till the temple was built and finished, and probably his own house likewise.

I hope those who have misrepresented and denounced Josephus, on account of the chronology of his Antiquities, will carefully read this article and compare it with his history, and acknowledge that they have been too severe upon him, and condemned him for what was no fault of his; and could we feel a brotherly charity towards him, we should make some effort to harmonize his numbers, and it is probable many more than are here mentioned, might be harmonized in the same way, when we are willing to give what we should like to receive. And even if we could not bring all into harmony, we should not reproach him, but consider that he was not responsible for the errors of the original copies, nor for those that have crept in since his death; and therefore as a faithful copyist, he should be held altogether harmless, and his name be had in respectful remembrance for the history of the Sacred Volume, which he has kindly left behind him.

I do not say that this chronology of Josephus is infallible, but I do say he has given the most perfect chain of years, without gap or break, from the creation of Adam to the destruction of Jerusalem, that I have ever seen. One of its most special advantages is, it leaves neither chasm, nor doubling of the chain at the head of our vulgar era, but takes as direct a course for four thousand, two hundred and two years, as does the track of a railroad from one station to another; and supersedes the necessity of any era whatever; though the Grecian, Roman, and Nebuchadnezzar eras were all used in his time, he has no need of either; nor of one single synchronism to complete his chain. To me it looks like a truthful history of years from the foundation of the world. My own feelings would prompt me to rejoice, could I find good evidence that the Lord would come at a much earlier date, than this chronology will admit; but I look in vain for proof of any other point than 1868, for the six thousandth year of the world. Still, when I look at the signs of the times I am reminded that the Lord is at hand; and sometimes can scarcely think of looking forward to the end of so great a period as eight long years; and as this chronology is not all inspired, every one that is wise will prepare to meet his God now, now, now; lest, coming suddenly, the Master find him unprepared.

"Reasons for my Hope."

The following is from Bro. Hastings' interesting work, entitled, "REASONS FOR MY HOPE." Every lover of truth should have a copy.—ED.

Our Savior has predicted, that at the time of his appearance, the world will be careless, and secure, and fearless of the coming of that day. "For as it was in the days that were before the flood; they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noah entered into the ark, and knew not until the flood came and took them all away; so SHALL ALSO THE COMING OF THE SON OF MAN BE." Matt. 24: 38, 39. And as in the days of Lot, "the same day that Lot went out of Sodom it rained fire and brimstone from heaven, and destroyed them all, even THUS SHALL IT BE in the day when the SON OF MAN IS REVEALED." Luke [illegible].

And is not the world in just that state of careless slumber now? Is there not the same apathy and lethargy to-day? Do not worldliness, and lust, and pleasure, engross the minds of the multitudes now? Have not the world combined to sing of the "good time that's coming," and forget the duties that are present, and the dangers that are impending? Have not vast multitudes of the professed church united to tell what LUTHER called "a FALSEHOOD FORGED by SATAN, that he might darken sound doctrine;" namely: that "before the latter day all the WORLD shall become CHRISTIANS?" Locked in the security of worldly slumber, men heed not the approach of danger. And as the flood broke in upon their dreams, or as the fiery storm turned to deep wailing the riotous pleasure of the cities of the plain, even so "the day of the Lord" shall thunder its horror upon the careless and ungodly, who people the world at the completion of this age. Is not this wide-spread carelessness then a most solemn portent of approaching doom? While the wicked say with heart, and lips, and life, "there is no God"—"all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation,"—should not the humble and the prayerful [illegible] the day of the Lord, which "so cometh as a thief in the night," should overtake them in the general security? Let us watch and pray always, that we "may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man." Luke 21: 36. In the language of Mathew Henry on 2 Peter 3: "That time which men think to be the most improper and unlikely, and therefore are most secure, will be the time of the Lord's coming. [illegible] worldly world.

Our Savior declared, that Jerusalem [illegible]

should be trodden down by the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles were fulfilled. "And there will be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and on the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; AS THE ROARING OF THE SEA AND WAVES: men's hearts failing them through fear and expectation of the things which are coming on the earth; for the powers of heaven will be shaken: and THEN will they see the Son of man coming in a cloud, with power and great glory. And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up and lift up your heads, for your REDEMPTION DRAWETH NIGH." Luke 21: 25–28. Penn's Translation.

This prediction could not have been fulfilled in ages gone by, because Jerusalem is still trodden down of the Gentiles, and hence their "times" are not fulfilled or accomplished. But the iron hand of Gentile tyranny seems to be loosening its grasp upon that land and that city, and all eyes instinctively turn towards the eastern world awaiting the unfolding of predicted events.

Dr. MacGowan who has been in Jerusalem as a physician for the poor since 1841, writes, Sept. 29th, 1859: "An extraordinary change has come over the city of Jerusalem. It is no longer the city which no man seeketh after.' It is now the resort of the wealthy, and the great ones of the earth. Large purchases of houses and lands have been made by agents of European Governments, and establishments on a large and magnificent scale will shortly be made in the neighborhood." He also stated that the increase of population is such, that the prices of provisions and rents had been greatly enhanced, much to the present disadvantage of the poorer people. These things indicate a marked change in the course of circumstances there, and doubtless other changes are in progress. And each token that Gentile domination approaches its termination there, is a token that David's long desolate throne shall yet be erected, and Israel's long prostrate diadem shall yet be uplifted and placed upon a royal brow, when He shall "come whose right it is," and God shall "give it him." Ezek. 21: 27.

There have been also, within the past few years, certain most striking exhibitions of celestial phenomena, which greatly exercised the minds of beholders, and which, at the time of their occurrence, produced a profound impression and conviction that that they were the portents of the day of doom. There was, in the year 1780, a most remarkable obscuration of the sun and moon, and the meteoric shower of Nov. 13th, 1833, which was unparalleled in its vast extent, reaching over "no inconsiderable part of the earth's surface, from the middle of the Atlantic on the east, to the Pacific on the west, and from the northern coast of South America to undefined regions among the British possessions on the north," was declared, by Professor Olmsted of New Haven, to be, probably, "the greatest display of celestial fireworks that has ever been since the creation of the world, or, at least, within the annals covered by the pages of history." Divers other remarkable signs and wonders have also been observed from time to time. But perhaps the prophecy relates more specially to other and still greater manifestations which shall succeed "the times of the Gentiles," and which shall occur in immediate proximity to the day of God, and in connection with the terrible convulsions of nature which shall attend its presence. However this may be, the "times of the Gentiles are evidently near their conclusion, and this fact is, to those who are watching, a token that their "redemption draweth nigh."

The Apostles were accustomed to speak of the times in which they lived, as "these last days," "the last time," "the last days," etc. Heb. 1: 1, 2; 1 John 2: 18; Acts 3: 17, 18. Now it is manifest that the "last days" could not come until more than half of the given series had passed by. The expression, "the last days," it will be remembered, has an import more or less extensive, according to the period in which it is used. Thus, as the pilgrim, while on a journey of six thousand miles, having passed one-third of the distance, would look forward to the last two thousand as the last miles, so the prophets saw the whole Christian dispensation as "the last days;" and as the pilgrim, after traveling four thousand miles of his journey, would naturally at times speak of being already on the last part of it, and yet, at other times, would speak of the last miles as yet in the future, and immediately preceding and extending to the journey's end; so the Apostles, standing at the commencement of the Gospel age, at times represent themselves as living in "the last days," and then again speak of those days as being yet in the future, and extending to, and closing with, the conclusion of the church's long journey in a groaning world. One thing, however, is clear, that the expression, "the last days," in its most comprehensive sense, cannot embrace more than the last half of the specified period, and must always include THE LAST DAY. And so, as the Apostles speak of living "in the last days" or "last [illegible]

[illegible] Rom. 13: 12, [illegible] the vain imaginations of those men who deny that myriads of ages will pass ere the end of this dispensation, are entirely destitute of truth.

A Nut for Spiritualists to Crack.

"Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you (Spiritualists) that God should raise the dead?"—Acts 26: 8.

When in Boston the other day, in conversation with a Spiritualist, he contended that were all the inhabitants of the world, who have ever lived and died, including those now living, raised from the dead and live at one time, the planet we inhabit would not contain a surface sufficiently large to accommodate them all: and he further stated, that were it possible for all to live at once they would cover its surface SIX DEEP. With what strange tenacity theorists will grasp at an idea, no matter whether it is true or false. It seems to me as though men never could have given such an idea as that above the second thought; had this been done, they could not but have discovered its folly and extreme absurdity. Let us refer to the facts of the case, for this is a question that can be decided by mathematical calculation.

In solving this problem, I affirm that the state of New York will furnish burial surface for twice the number of inhabitants that have ever lived and died in our world. PROOF. The flood occurred A. M. 1260. Then the earth could have been but thinly populated. We will put down the aggregate population at one billion, six hundred and fifty-six million. From that epoch to the present, there have been forty-two centuries. The whole population dies three times in each century, therefore one hundred and twenty-six generations have expired from that period to the present. If we say the average population to have been five hundred millions in each generation, and this multiplied by 126, the number of generations, gives us an aggregate of sixty-three billions. This number added to the one billion, six hundred and fifty-six million, the aggregate population of the antediluvian world, gives the aggregate population for the past and present, at sixty-four billion, six hundred and fifty-six million. Now for the test. We have 640 square acres in a square mile, which, when reduced to square feet gives twenty-seven million, eight hundred seventy-eight thousand and four hundred square feet. The state of New York contains 46,000 square miles. Multiplying this by the number of square feet in a square mile, we have the product of one trillion, two hundred and eighty-two billion, four hundred and six million, four hundred thousand. This number divided by ten, the average number of square feet given to each body, gives us a quotient of one hundred and twenty-eight billion, two hundred and forty million, six hundred and forty thousand. Now if we divide this number by sixty-four billion, the number of the whole population of the world, we have two as the quotient. Therefore it is demonstrated that the state of New York will furnish burial surface for twice the entire population of this globe. How absurd, then, the notion that this vast earth would be covered six deep, were all the inhabitants to live at one time! What a wonderful objection is this to offer against the literal resurrection of the dead!

But again, when my Spiritualist friend found his first objection refuted, he advanced a philosophical problem as follows:—He asserted "that the particles of matter composing an individual body, by their decomposition after the death of the body, enrich the surrounding earth, and give rise to a growth of vegetation. This vegetation is consumed by other living individuals, which individuals are thus nourished by the same particles of which the former dead body was composed, and in their turn die in possession of them, thereby rendering a literal resurrection of both individuals a natural impossibility."

In answer to the above objection I remarked, in the first place, that the presumed objection rests wholly on inference, and an attempt to demonstrate such an hypothesis would be as natural an impossibility as it would be to raise both bodies, were they at death in possession of every atom of matter of which each was composed at the time of that event. Admitting that my friend possessed the supposed penetration and wisdom of the old alchemists themselves, would even this qualify him to trace the courses of a particle of matter, passing through its process of decomposition, and entering again into a new formation! As this idea cannot be determined by chemical analysis, for the same chemical properties enter alike into the formation of vegetables and animals, therefore the objection rests on mere inference, and hence possesses but little force relative to the literal resurrection of the dead.

All that is claimed by the apostle in relation to this subject is, that the dead body merely contains the germ of the resurrection body, like the grain of wheat producing the entire stalk and head, multiplied perhaps an hundred fold; so that if there is as small a proportion of the original particles possessed at death, entering again into the resurrection body, as that of the grain of wheat that dies, compared to the multiplied other, and also for that of the original seed; it is all that is claimed for the resurrection body.

But the Almighty Creator of the universe has committed himself to accomplish this resurrection, and therefore he is bound to see to it, that no operation of nature's laws, of which he himself is the author, shall so far mingle, mix, and transfuse the component parts of their dead bodies, as to throw an insuperable barrier in the way of their resurrection, rendering such an event a natural impossibility. Should he permit such an occurrence to take place, it would be a reflection upon his wisdom, arguing that he had not sufficiently considered the plan or work he had undertaken to accomplish. In fact, it is unnecessary that there should be any greater amount of wisdom brought into requisition, or a display of any more power for the accomplishment of a literal resurrection, than that manifested at the original formation of the first man of our race from common dust. Out of this confusion of elements were all the chemical properties arranged in the exact proportions—composing the bones, tendons, muscles, fibres and nerves, and also by the skill of this wonderful mind was created arterial blood, containing all the chemical properties of the entire system, adapted to supply the common decay of all its parts, and then infusing it into its proper vessels, and vitalizing the whole machine direct by his own breath. I repeat, that to raise and resuscitate the dead, calls for an exhibition of no greater powers than must have been exercised in the physical organization of the original progenitors of our species. How hopelessly, therefore, do such objections as these fail to overthrow the glorious truth of the literal resurrection.

When the time arrives for the grand event to be accomplished, that same dread voice that once said, "Let there be light," and there was light; and that was reiterated by the Son of God to the stormy winds, saying, "Peace, be still," and immediately there was a great calm; and which, thundering fearfully upon Sinai's trembling brow, shook the empyrean of heaven and earth; and by whose mandates, Eden's blooming glory appeared arrayed in all her pristine grandeur and magnificence, from a chaotic mass of heterogeneous confusion; that voice will again be heard on the morn of the resurrection, thundering in the vault of heaven, shaking the vast empire of nature from its centre to its circumference, arousing from their dreamless slumbers the joyful righteous dead, blooming with immortality. Ever yours, praying, "Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly." Amen.

The Clerk of the Weather.

I have found who he is. He publishes "The Monthly Rainbow and Meteorologist," in which he predicts from scientific principles, with great accuracy, the changes of the weather for each month in advance, day by day, and hour by hour. His system is new, easy, beautiful, but I have not time to state it now. His Monthly has been issued about ten years. I have friends who have observed during this period remarkable verifications in changes, earthquakes, pestilences, storms, etc. Some of them I have observed myself. Send 50 cts. to Dr. L. L. Chapman, Philadelphia, Pa., and get the "Rainbow" for a year, or send $1 and get his book, "The Principia," and "Rainbow" for six months. Or send six cents and get a weather table for a month, that is worth more for its purpose than all the almanacs in christendom.

To my Friends in Jesus.

After Dec. 27th, my address will be Providence, R. I., care H. L. Hastings.—J. J. Damon, will be at the North Abingtot Depot, Dec. 27th.

Come now, friends, we want your help. Don't keep back those old clothes, boots, or money, by saying "people in our midst can have them, no use to send them to Providence." You've kept them already till moths have corrupted sorrowfully.

According to latest despatch from H. L. H. Dorcas is to make up garments by machinery. So we want a good supply to work on. Cold winter is here, and those bright-eyed little ones out on the cold, damp streets need to be clothed. The "women" are willing to "labor in the gospel" in this way; and if the men don't help, we'll conclude, may be, we've "missed our calling."

Some enquire "Is the Providence S. S. Mission a free gift on the part of its mangers?" Yes, it is; we'll work free, talk ring and pray free. And we'll expect the friends of Jesus to be free, so that "free salvation" be brought to many.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, DECEMBER 12, 1860.

Leaves from my Diary.

Thursday, Nov. 29th. Instead of enjoying the pleasures of this Thanksgiving day with friends at home, we concluded to to spend it in visiting the widow and fatherless "in their affliction." Accordingly, we left Worcester for Westfield, a distance of about sixty-five miles, to call on Sr. Stocking, a lonely widow, who has been seized by the relentless hand of consumption, compelling her to walk rapidly to the grave. We had a profitable season in conversation, and around the family altar, in company with the afflicted ones. No joys around the festive board of mirth could compare with the sweet peace we felt while mingling our sympathies in humble prayer to God for blessings upon this sad circle, composed of a sick mother and her children. Rosa, the eldest, is an amiable christian, faithful and kind to her mother, and calmly trusting in the God of Elijah. Nobly has she resisted the charms of a proud and fashionable world. Would that we could see more of such examples. How few are heeding the instruction—"Be not conformed to this world." Most seem to think, if they do as well as others, that they shall be justified. Public opinion, instead of the Bible, has become their standard of action. Instead of asking, will this or that please the Lord, or become me as a christian, they are anxious to know whether the world—the fashionable portion—will approve. But few have firmness of religious principle sufficient to "face a frowning world," and really come out from its silly customs and fashions, and be separate. They seem to have adopted the unchristian sentiment, "We may as well be out of the world as out of the fashion." Says Jesus, "I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you." The class is small that is now separate from the spirit and manners of the world. But we find no promise of salvation to any other.

From Westfield, we made a flying visit to Winsted, calling on a few friends. Had a pleasant interview with Dr. Patterson, who has embraced the Bible view of the sleep of the dead and the destruction of wicked. Others are examining the subject, and are astonished at the clear manner in which these truths are revealed in the Scriptures.

We called on our aged mother in Torringford, and had a pleasant visit at our boyhood home. Mother is now in her eighty-eighth year, enjoying good health, peace of mind, and the "blessed hope" of soon seeing Jesus. The Lord faithfully sustains her in her declining years, making old age pleasant and cheerful.

Dec. 1st we returned to Worcester, passing through Hartford. In the latter place, we were saddened to hear of death's work among the church in that city. Brn. Sage, Kelsey, Clapp and Pearson, have recently been called to sleep the sleep of death, leaving loved ones to mourn in solemn sadness. Brn. Dean and Hall have also laid away each a lovely son. But we are comforted with the hope that the time of separation from our dear friends is now very short. The Conqueror of death will soon begin his glorious work of redeeming them from the power of the grave.

Worcester, Dec. 2nd. We had a large and attentive audience at the City Hall to-day. The truth is evidently spreading in this city. Our discussion with Mr. Ballou has produced happy results. The people are anxious to hear more about the Bible hope.

Monday evening, Dec. 3. We had an excellent meeting at our office. The Spirit of the Lord was truly in our midst. Bro. Morgan is encouraged to hope for happy results from his labors during the coming winter. Pray for us.

An Inquiry.

"If a person is converted, and baptized by immersion, yet did not understand that it was to show forth Christ's death and resurrection, but merely obeying a command; is it his duty to be baptized again, when he understands the signification of baptism?"—E. C.

We find no such instruction in the Scriptures. It is more pleasant to receive the ordinance of baptism when we know its signifiation; but we do not understand that baptism consists in our knowledge of what it represents, but in the act of immersion in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit. The Lord is not under obligations to give a reason why he has enjoined baptism upon his followers. If we know it is his command, we should obey at once, and thus show our love for him by our obedience. If we find out the reason for this act, either before or after baptism, we should be thankful for the light. In our own case, we did not understand its meaning till some time after we had obeyed the command, but we have seen no reason for re-baptism; neither have we felt any promptings of the Spirit in that direction. We should have enjoyed it better, no doubt, had we then seen all the light we now do upon the subject; but do not know that it would have been any more pleasing to the Lord; because in either case, we should have done it as an act of obedience to his [illegible]

Discussion with Ballou.

Our late discussion with Adin Ballou, at Worcester, which was held at the City Hall on the afternoons and evenings of Nov. 27th and 28th, was one of much interest, and resulted in a glorious triumph of the truth. He is a very fair and able man in debate, and it seemed a pity that such a noble specimen of humanity should be defending the side of error. Our discussion was very pleasant, and we trust it will result in much good. Notwithstanding adverse circumstances, we had some five or six hundred of attentive and intelligent listeners, who appeared anxious to know the truth. It is quite evident that many are dissatisfied with the theology of the day, and are looking for something more consistent. But few really believe in the doctrine of eternal torment, which they must do if the soul is an immortal man housed in the body, unless all men are saved. So long as man is believed to be immortal in this present state of existence, we think it impossible to harmonize the Scriptures with themselves, or with common sense. Men will reject the Bible rather than believe in eternal misery; but when they see the truth, that all the wicked are to be destroyed, they are ready to confess the justice and mercy of God in ending sin and misery by putting the incorrigible sinner out of existence. Should he live on eternally, he would only be adding sin to sin and heaping up misery; being of no possible use to any one. We are thankful that God has revealed in his Word, that "sin when it is finished bringeth forth death."

Our subject for discussion was the following:—Resolved, "That immortality is a gift from God, dependent on the character of the receiver." We adopted Mr. Webster's definition of immortality as follows:—"The quality of never ceasing to live or exist. Exemption from death and annihilation; life destined to endure without end."

In opposition to the resolution, Mr. Ballou laid down the following propositions, which we think were not sustained by the Scriptures or sound argument:—

1. "Immortality is a gift of God independent of character."

2. "Immortality is not a synonym for eternal life."

To this we replied, Mr Webster defines eternal as follows:—"Without beginning or end of existence." "Without end of existence, or duration; everlasting; endless; immortal." Immortal is defined by the words, "Endless, eternal, not mortal, undying and imperishable." Eternal is defined by the following words:—"Without end, endless, immortal, undying, and imperishable."

3. He assumed that, "Everlasting life is a divine principle, or spiritual element, rendering orderly moral natures eminently peaceful and blest."

To this we objected that he had attributed to "everlasting life" the work of the Holy Spirit. We found the Scriptures affirming that "eternal life" is "the gift of God" to those who obey him, and not something that causes us to live well. It is the reward for "well doing."

4. He asserted that, "Man may have eternal life in this world and lose it again."

No proof was given from Scripture or any other source.

5. "The body sown is not raised." "Resurrection does not consist in raising the body."

We found the Bible directly opposed to this sentiment, which says, when speaking of the resurrection, "God giveth . . . . to every seed his own body." Says Paul, "If there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen. And if Christ be not risen . . . then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are PERISHED." Says Jesus, "Marvel not at this; for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation." We endeavored to show our friend Ballou, that the Scriptures most plainly teach that our future life, if we die, depends entirely on the resurrection of the dead; and that christians who have died are "perished" if the dead rise not.

6. "The breath of life' is individualized after it enters the body by being associated with its finer particles, and thus becomes the real man, which lives on when the body has turned again to dust."

This was one of his principal points. In opposition to this, we found the Bible declaring that man and beast "have all one breath," without an intimation that our friend B.'s position was correct. He argued, or rather asserted, that after the breath enters either man or beast, it becomes the individual; and in the case of man, is all that survives the effects of death. He admitted that the breath was not a being when it came into the man, but was changed and formed into an immortal man, after it came in contact with man's physical organism. This was met with the remark that his immortal man was composed of "the breath of life" common to man and beast, and parts of the body of a mortal man; and we could not see how, on his own theory, that the union of the two constituted an immortal being. We think he saw [illegible] own theory. We could not help thinking how much twisting and turning it takes to give error even the semblance of truth; and after the very best of efforts, by the ablest of men, its hideous deformity is still apparent even to a careless observer.

He remarked that "this breath man" would go through any number of metallic coffins, or through the entire earth itself. We replied, if this be true, the entire man must go through one single pore between the particles in the various metallic coffins; or else be divided into many parts, each one of which would pass through a single pore. He thought the latter might be the case. But here his philosophy was opposed to all facts. When an organized being, (and it is absurd to suppose an unorganized one,) passes through a forest of trees or anything else, one part of him does not go one side of the tree, and another on the other side; but the entire being passes on the same side. Or, if he were crawling among rocks in the caverns of the earth, or coming up through the earth, as Mr. Ballou asserted the real man could do; in case the man comes to a narrow pass, he does not send one part of himself one side of the stone, and another part on the other side, while a third goes through another hole, and thus like a company of gentlemen finally meet together again in some place large enough to hold them all. And yet the absurdity must be believed, or else the whole man must be small enough to go through one single pore of a metallic coffin. We have yet to learn that man is a being smaller than the point of a cambric needle. As neither of these positions can be true, we argued that when a living man is inclosed in a metallic coffin and hermetically sealed before his death, the entire man is in the coffin, and dies for want of "the breath of life."

The following points were admitted by Mr. Ballou:—1. "No character is approved by God but one of moral goodness." 2. "Happiness depends on character." 3. "God can destroy us." 4. "Man is mortal as to his form." 5. "There is no question but the Bible speaks of men as dead." 6. "Eternal life is dependent upon the character of the receiver." 7. "There are texts with words that correspond with our views." 8. "Our position is supported by various portions of Scripture."

After a careful examination of the whole subject, we think the intelligent audience were satisfied that the Scriptures teach most plainly, that man is mortal in this state of existence, and may obtain immortality only through Christ "by patient continuance in well doing"; and that all the wicked will be destroyed; hence, "Immortality is a gift of God, dependent upon the character of the receiver."

A REQUEST.—When at New Bedford, Mass., we met Eld. James Taylor, a Christian preacher, who has been laboring in Cascade, Dubuque Co., Iowa, where a church has been established; but since he left for this city, they are without a shepherd to feed them. Bro. Taylor, in their behalf, wishes to request some of the western preachers to visit them, and administer the word of life to this flock of God.

Query.

Which Bible is right? ours or the Douay—the Catholic—in Matt. 26: 28, Mark 14: 24, and Luke 22: 20?

B. GREAVES.

These verses read as follows in the Douay Bible:—"For this is my blood of the new testament, which shall be shed," etc., instead of "is shed," as in King James' version. Wicklif's, Rheims and the Bishop's Bible read "shall be," as the Douay. It is a matter of uncertainty, and not important, as to which way it is translated. The old MSS. are not uniform. Some have the present tense of the verb, and others the future participle. The evidence is about equally divided, but rather preponderating in favor of "is shed," instead of "shall be shed." The former is supported by Tischendorf, who is considered the best editor, and with him agree Griesbach and Scholz.

If we adopt the present tense, as in our common version, it may indicate, by the figure of prolepsis, a future, but certain event. Such expressions are common in the Bible. Taken either way, no special point of doctrine is sustained or refuted.

Light Wanted on Rev. 22: 8.

Was it an angel or Christ who gave the Revelation to John?

The answer to this inquiry is obvious, when we turn to Rev. 1: 1, which reads as follows:—"The Revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto him, to shew unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass; and he sent and signified it by his angel unto his servant John." God gave a revelation to his Son; and he sent it by an angel to John upon the Isle of Patmos, who was instructed to write it "in a book, and send it unto the seven churches." We find no intimation that this angel was Christ, but plain statements to the contrary. Near the close of the instruction sent by the angel, John says, "I fell down to worship before the feet of the angel which showed me these things." Rev. 22: 8. This angel is not sent by Christ, as John, with the [illegible] left this world. This appears to be a very plain point.

Spiritualists sometime argue from Rev. 22: 9, that this angel was one of the prophets. If we should admit this for argument's sake, it might be either Enoch or Elijah, who were translated and did not see death; but the Scriptures affirm no such thing as is claimed by the Spiritualists relative to this passage. It reads as follows:—"Then saith he [the angel] unto me, "See thou do it not; for I am thy fellow-servant, and of thy brethren the prophets." The oldest printed edition of the New Testament in English, which is Wm. Tyndale's, reads,—"I am thy fellow-servant and the fellow servant of thy brethren the prophets." The same idea is involved in our common version of this passage. This angel was not only a servant to John, but had been to other prophets. This might have been the one who instructed Daniel relative to the history of this world; but we find no proof that this angel was Christ, or one of the prophets.

Build Church Edifices.

BY D. T. TAYLOR.

Who? Why, Adventists to be sure. Why not? Are they not proper and needful? Do not other churches build them? I repeat it, erect houses in which to meet and worship God and preach Christ's coming and kingdom. They are far too rare in all our land. Not because there is not material enough or money enough to build them, but on account of a lack of energy, enterprise, and a determination to "rise and build." All over the northern states there are Advent churches who are dependent on other denominations, or on some grumbling set of trustees, for a place to meet in conference or to hold a funeral service. A reluctant consent is given the most of us to occupy their houses, because we are too often accounted as heretics to whom no favor should be allowed. Doors are opened to us grudgingly. The minister sometimes refuses to sit with us in the pulpit. And if we preach God's whole truth without any catering or fear, the result is the doors are thereafter closed against us; and if we seek a second favor, we only get nays and frowns. Hence each church, if able to build, should have a house of their own. A church without a house, is like a town without a town-house, like sheep without a pen, like a family having no home. At present, very few of our churches own a decent or comfortable place of worship. Most of them crowd into private houses, school-houses, or barns, or else go into borrowed meeting houses, and groves. We have the best form of God's glorious gospel, and the most sublime system of divine truth that ever fell to the ear of mortals. Is it not worthy of a good place in which to proclaim it? And ought we to be dependent on those who, if they could, would quickly crush out and extirpate our grand doctrines from the land? Nay. This dependence is, in numerous instances, of course, a matter of sheer necessity; but in very many cases it might be otherwise, provided there was a will. I know of churches worth $50,000, or even $75,000, who meet in halls, high up in some second or third story, where old and feeble folks dread to go. A crew of rowdies disturbs their quiet, perhaps. Their prayer-meetings go a begging for a proper and quiet spot. I know of churches worth $20,000, worshiping in some out-of-the-way corner of the town, where nobody can find them without a search, as though they were ashamed to be seen by the community generally. I know of some churches in cities, and elsewhere, who have paid rent-money enough in the past ten years to have built them a good house. Others crowd into low, dirty school-houses, where the preacher, if he happens to be tall, is obliged to breathe over the air first breathed and de-oxygenated by a hundred persons who sit below him. I have preached in such miasmatic places, and often been strongly reminded of the humorous clergyman, who as often as he insisted on having God's pure free air to breathe while in the pulpit, would as often be defeated in his wishes by some one among his congregation closing every door and window, until he at last, in a state of desperation, observed that he verily believed if he was preaching in a junk-bottle they would persist in putting in the stopple.

Nothing injured my vocal powers and general health so much, during the first two years of my ministry, as speaking in low, close, unventilated rooms. Exposure to cool air follows, and as a natural result laryngitis, pharyngitis, bronchitis ensues—perhaps for life.

Furthermore, I know of one church—I write it to their shame—who began to build, got out the timber, appointed a committee, nearly selected the site, talked big about "their new house," and then got into wrangle about ways and means, gave it up, and utterly abandoned the whole thing,—becoming the laughing-stock of the whole town and the derision of the devil. I know of those who would refuse, most miserly, to aid a cent in building, just because the house was not erected precisely on the spot where they, in their [illegible]

should be trodden down by the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles were fulfilled. "And there will be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and on the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; AS THE ROARING OF THE SEA AND WAVES: men's hearts failing them through fear and expectation of the things which are coming on the earth; for the powers of heaven will be shaken; and then will they see the Son of man coming in a cloud, with power and great glory. And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up and lift up your heads; for YOUR REDEMPTION DRAWETH NIGH." Luke 21: 25-28, Penn's Translation.

This prediction could not have been fulfilled in ages gone by, because Jerusalem is still trodden down of the Gentiles, and hence their "times" are not fulfilled or accomplished. But the iron hand of Gentile tyranny seems to be loosening its grasp upon that land and that city, and all eyes instinctively turn towards the eastern world awaiting the unfolding of predicted events.

Dr. MacGowan who has been in Jerusalem as a physician for the poor since 1841, writes, Sept. 29th, 1859: "An extraordinary change has come over the city of Jerusalem. It is no longer the city which no man seeketh after. It is now the resort of the wealthy, and the great ones of the earth. Large purchases of houses and lands have been made by agents of European Governments, and establishments on a large and magnificent scale will shortly be made in the neighborhood." He also stated that the increase of population is such, that the prices of provisions and rents had been greatly enhanced, much to the present disadvantage of the poorer people. These things indicate a marked change in the course of circumstances there, and doubtless other changes are in progress. And each token that Gentile domination approaches its termination there, is a token that David's long desolate throne shall yet be erected, and Israel's long prostrate diadem shall yet be uplifted and placed upon a royal brow, when He shall "come whose right it is," and God shall "give it him." Ezek. 21: 27.

There have been also, within the past few years, certain most striking exhibitions of celestial phenomena, which greatly exercised the minds of beholders, and which, at the time of their occurrence, produced a profound impression and conviction that they were the portents of the day of doom. There was, in the year 1780, a most remarkable obscuration of the sun and moon, and the meteoric shower of Nov. 13th, 1833, which was unparalleled in its vast extent, reaching over "no inconsiderable part of the earth's surface, from the middle of the Atlantic on the east, to the Pacific on the west, and from the northern coast of South America to undefined regions among the British possessions on the north," was declared, by Professor Olmsted of New Haven, to be, probably, "the greatest display of celestial fireworks that has ever been since the creation of the world, or, at least, within the annals covered by the pages of history." Divers other remarkable signs and wonders have also been observed from time to time. But perhaps the prophecy relates more specially to other and still greater manifestations which shall succeed "the times of the Gentiles," and which shall occur in immediate proximity to the day of God, and in connection with the terrible convulsions of nature which shall attend its presence. However this may be, the "times of the Gentiles are evidently near their conclusion, and this fact is, to those who are watching, a token that their "redemption draweth nigh."

The Apostles were accustomed to speak of the times in which they lived, as "these last days," "the last time," "the last days," etc. Heb. 1: 1, 2; 1 John 2: 18; Acts 3: 17, 18. Now it is manifest that the "last days" could not come until more than half of the given series had passed by. The expression, "the last days," it will be remembered, has an import more or less extensive, according to the period in which it is used. Thus, as the pilgrim, while on a journey of six thousand miles, having passed one-third of the distance, would look forward to the last two thousand as the last miles, so the prophets saw the whole Christian dispensation as "the last days;" and as the pilgrim, after traveling four thousand miles of his journey, would naturally at times speak of being already on the last part of it, and yet, at other times, would speak of the last miles as yet in the future, and immediately preceding and extending to the journey's end; so the Apostles, standing at the commencement of the Gospel age, at times represent themselves as living in "the last days," and then again speak of those days as being yet in the future, and extending to, and closing with, the conclusion of the church's long journey in a groaning world. One thing, however, is clear, that the expression, "the last days," in its most comprehensive sense, cannot embrace more than the last half of the specified period, and must always include "THE LAST DAY." And so, as the Apostles spoke of living "in the last days," or "last time," the conclusion is inevitable, that the [illegible] and the day was at hand." Rom. 13: 12, and that the vain imaginations of those men who fancy that myriads of ages will pass ere the end of this dispensation, are entirely destitute of truth.

For the Crisis.

A Nut for Spiritualists to Crack.

"Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you (Spiritualists) that God should raise the dead?"—Acts 26: 8.

When in Boston the other day, in conversation with a Spiritualist, he contended that were all the inhabitants of the world, who have ever lived and died, including those now living, raised from the dead and live at one time, the planet we inhabit would not contain a surface sufficiently large to accommodate them all: and he further stated, that were it possible for all to live at once they would cover its surface SIX DEEP. With what strange tenacity theorists will grasp at an idea, no matter whether it is true or false. It seems to me as though men never could have given such an idea as that above the second thought; had this been done, they could not but have discovered its folly and extreme absurdity. Let us refer to the facts of the case, for this is a question that can be decided by mathematical calculation.

In solving this problem, I affirm that the state of New York will furnish burial surface for twice the number of inhabitants that have ever lived and died in our world. PROOF. The flood occurred A. M. 1260. Then the earth could have been but thinly populated. We will put down the aggregate population at one billion, six hundred and fifty-six million. From that epoch to the present, there have been forty-two centuries. The whole population dies three times in each century, therefore one hundred and twenty-six generations have expired from that period to the present. If we say the average population to have been five hundred millions in each generation, and this multiplied by 126, the number of generations, gives us an aggregate of sixty-three billions. This number added to the one billion, six hundred and fifty-six million, the aggregate population of the antediluvian world, gives the aggregate population for the past and present, at sixty-four billion, six hundred and fifty-six million. Now for the test. We have 640 square acres in a square mile, which, when reduced to square feet gives twenty-seven million, eight hundred seventy-eight thousand and four hundred square feet. The state of New York contains 46,000 square miles. Multiplying this by the number of square feet in a square mile, we have the product of one trillion, two hundred and eighty-two billion, four hundred and six million, four hundred thousand. This number divided by ten, the average number of square feet given to each body, gives us a quotient of one hundred and twenty-eight billion, two hundred and forty million, six hundred and forty thousand. Now if we divide this number by sixty-four billion, the number of the whole population of the world, we have two as the quotient. Therefore it is demonstrated that the state of New York will furnish burial surface for twice the entire population of this globe. How absurd, then, the notion that this vast earth would be covered six deep, were all the inhabitants to live at one time! What a wonderful objection is this to offer against the literal resurrection of the dead!

But again, when my Spiritualist friend found his first objection refuted, he advanced a philosophical problem as follows:—He asserted "that the particles of matter composing an individual body, by their decomposition after the death of the body, enrich the surrounding earth, and give rise to a growth of vegetation. This vegetation is consumed by other living individuals, which individuals are thus nourished by the same particles of which the former dead body was composed, and in their turn die in possession of them, thereby rendering a literal resurrection of both individuals a natural impossibility."

In answer to the above objection I remarked, in the first place, that the presumed objection rests wholly on inference, and an attempt to demonstrate such an hypothesis would be as natural an impossibility as it would be to raise both bodies, were they at death in possession of every atom of matter of which each was composed at the time of that event. Admitting that my friend possessed the supposed penetration and wisdom of the old alchemists themselves, would even this qualify him to trace the courses of a particle of matter, passing through its process of decomposition, and entering again into a new formation! As this idea cannot be determined by chemical analysis, for the same chemical properties enter alike into the formation of vegetables and animals, therefore the objection rests on mere inference, and hence possesses but little force relative to the literal resurrection of the dead.

All that is claimed by the apostle in relation to this subject is, that the dead body merely contains the germ of the resurrection body, like the grain of wheat production the entire stalk and head, multiplied perhaps an hundred fold; so that if there is as small a proportion of the original particles possessed at death, entering again into the resurrection body, as that of the grain of wheat that dies, compared to the multi- [illegible] other, and also for that of the original seed, it is all that is claimed for the resurrection body.

But the Almighty Creator of the universe has committed himself to accomplish this resurrection, and therefore he is bound to see to it, that no operation of nature's laws, of which he himself is the author, shall so far mingle, mix, and transfuse the component parts of their dead bodies, as to throw an insuperable barrier in the way of their resurrection, rendering such an event a natural impossibility. Should he permit such an occurrence to take place, it would be a reflection upon his wisdom, arguing that he had not sufficiently considered the plan or work he had undertaken to accomplish. In fact, it is unnecessary that there should be any greater amount of wisdom brought into requisition, or a display of any more power for the accomplishment of a literal resurrection, than that manifested at the original formation of the first man of our race from common dust. Out of this confusion of elements were all the chemical properties arranged in the exact proportions—composing the bones, tendons, muscles, fibres and nerves, and also by the skill of this wonderful mind was created arterial blood, containing all the chemical properties of the entire system, adapted to supply the common decay of all its parts, and then infusing it into its proper vessels, and vitalizing the whole machine direct by his own breath. I repeat, that to raise and resuscitate the dead, calls for an exhibition of no greater powers than must have been exercised in the physical organization of the original progenitors of our species. How hopelessly, therefore, do such objections as these fail to overthrow the glorious truth of the literal resurrection.

When the time arrives for the grand event to be accomplished, that same dread voice that once said, "Let there be light," and there was light; and that was reiterated by the Son of God to the stormy winds, saying, "Peace, be still," and immediately there was a great calm; and which, thundering fearfully upon Sinai's trembling brow, shook the empyrean of heaven and earth; and by whose mandates, Eden's blooming glory appeared arrayed in all her pristine grandeur and magnificence, from a chaotic mass of heterogeneous confusion; that voice will again be heard on the morn of the resurrection, thundering in the vault of heaven, shaking the vast empire of nature from its centre to its circumference, arousing from their dreamless slumbers the joyful righteous dead, blooming with immortality. Ever yours, praying, "Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly." Amen.

The Clerk of the Weather.

I have found who he is. He publishes "The Monthly Rainbow and Meteorologist," in which he predicts from scientific principles, with great accuracy, the changes of the weather for each month in advance, day by day, and hour by hour. His system is new, easy, beautiful, but I have not time to state it now. His Monthly has been issued about ten years. I have friends who have observed during this period remarkable verifications in changes, earthquakes, pestilences, storms, etc. Some of them I have observed myself. Send 50 cts. to Dr. L. L. Chapman, Philadelphia, Pa., and get the "Rainbow" for a year, or send $1 and get his book, "The Principia," and "Rainbow" for six months. Or send six cents and get a weather table for a month, that is worth more for its purpose than all the almanacs in christendom.

To my Friends in Jesus.

After Dec. 27th, my address will be Providence, R. I., care H. L. Hastings.—J. J. Damon, will be at the North Abington Depot, Dec. 27th.

Come now, friends, we want your help. Don't keep back those old clothes, boots, or money, by saying "people in our midst can have them, no use to send them to Providence." You've kept them already till moths have corrupted sorrowfully.

According to latest despatch from H. L. H. Dorcas is to make up garments by machinery. So we want a good supply to work on. Cold winter is here, and those bright-eyed little ones out on the cold, damp streets need to be clothed. The "women" are willing to "labor in the gospel" in this way; and if the men don't help, we'll conclude, may be, we've "missed our calling."

Some enquire "Is the Providence S. S. Mission a free gift on the part of its managers?" Yes, it is; we'll work free, talk ring and pray free. And we'll expect the friends of Jesus to be free, so that "free salvation" be brought to many.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, DECEMBER 12, 1860.

Leaves from my Diary.

Thursday, Nov. 29th. Instead of enjoying the pleasures of this Thanksgiving day with friends at home, we concluded to to spend it in visiting the widow and fatherless "in their affliction." Accordingly, we left Worcester for Westfield, a distance of about sixty-five miles, to call on Sr. Stocking, a lonely widow, who has been seized by the relentless hand of consumption, compelling her to walk rapidly to the grave. We had a profitable season in conversation, and around the family altar, in company with the afflicted ones. No joys around the festive board of mirth could compare with the sweet peace we felt while mingling our sympathies in humble prayer to God for blessings upon this sad circle, composed of a sick mother and her children. Rosa, the eldest, is an amiable christian, faithful and kind to her mother, and calmly trusting in the God of Elijah. Nobly has she resisted the charms of a proud and fashionable world. Would that we could see more of such examples. How few are heeding the instruction—"Be not conformed to this world." Most seem to think, if they do as well as others, that they shall be justified. Public opinion, instead of the Bible, has become their standard of action. Instead of asking, will this or that please the Lord, or become me as a christian, they are anxious to know whether the world—the fashionable portion—will approve. But few have firmness of religious principle sufficient to "face a frowning world," and really come out from its silly customs and fashions, and be separate. They seem to have adopted the unchristian sentiment, "We may as well be out of the world as out of the fashion." Says Jesus, "I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you." The class is small that is now separate from the spirit and manners of the world. But we find no promise of salvation to any other.

From Westfield, we made a flying visit to Winsted, calling on a few friends. Had a pleasant interview with Dr. Patterson, who has embraced the Bible view of the sleep of the dead and the destruction of wicked. Others are examining the subject, and are astonished at the clear manner in which these truths are revealed in the Scriptures.

We called on our aged mother in Torringford, and had a pleasant visit at our boyhood home. Mother is now in her eighty-eighth year, enjoying good health, peace of mind, and the "blessed hope" of soon seeing Jesus. The Lord faithfully sustains her in her declining years, making old age pleasant and cheerful.

Dec. 1st we returned to Worcester, passing through Hartford. In the latter place, we were saddened to hear of death's work among the church in that city. Brn. Sage, Kelsey, Clapp and Pearson, have recently been called to sleep the sleep of death, leaving loved ones to mourn in solemn sadness. Brn. Dean and Hall have also laid away each a lovely son. But we are comforted with the hope that the time of separation from our dear friends is now very short. The Conqueror of death will soon begin his glorious work of redeeming them from the power of the grave.

Worcester, Dec. 2nd. We had a large and attentive audience at the City Hall to-day. The truth is evidently spreading in this city. Our discussion with Mr. Ballou has produced happy results. The people are anxious to hear more about the Bible hope.

Monday evening, Dec. 3. We had an excellent meeting at our office. The Spirit of the Lord was truly in our midst. Bro. Morgan is encouraged to hope for happy results from his labors during the coming winter. Pray for us.

An Inquiry.

"If a person is converted, and baptized by immersion, yet did not understand that it was to show forth Christ's death and resurrection, but merely obeying a command; is it his duty to be baptized again, when he understands the signification of baptism?"—E. C.

We find no such instruction in the Scriptures. It is more pleasant to receive the ordinance of baptism when we know its signifiaation; but we do not understand that baptism consists in our knowledge of what it represents, but in the act of immersion in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit. The Lord is not under obligations to give a reason why he has enjoined baptism upon his followers. If we know it is his command, we should obey at once, and thus show our love for him by our obedience. If we find out the reason for this act, either before or after baptism, we should be thankful for the light. In our own case, we did not understand its meaning till some time after we had obeyed the command, but we have seen no reason for re-baptism; neither have we felt any promptings of the Spirit in that direction. We should have enjoyed it better, no doubt, had we then seen all the light we now do upon the subject; but do not know that it would have been any more pleasing to the Lord; because in either case, we should have done it as an act of obedience to his [illegible]

Discussion with Ballou.

Our late discussion with Adin Ballou, at Worcester, which was held at the City Hall on the afternoons and evenings of Nov. 27th and 28th, was one of much interest, and resulted in a glorious triumph of the truth. He is a very fair and able man in debate, and it seemed a pity that such a noble specimen of humanity should be defending the side of error. Our discussion was very pleasant, and we trust it will result in much good. Notwithstanding adverse circumstances, we had some five or six hundred of attentive and intelligent listeners, who appeared anxious to know the truth. It is quite evident that many are dissatisfied with the theology of the day, and are looking for something more consistent. But few really believe in the doctrine of eternal torment, which they must do if the soul is an immortal man housed in the body, unless all men are saved. So long as man is believed to be immortal in this present state of existence, we think it impossible to harmonize the Scriptures with themselves, or with common sense. Men will reject the Bible rather than believe in eternal misery; but when they see the truth, that all the wicked are to be destroyed, they are ready to confess the justice and mercy of God in ending sin and misery by putting the incorrigible sinner out of existence. Should he live on eternally, he would only be adding sin to sin and heaping up misery; being of no possible use to any one. We are thankful that God has revealed in his Word, that "sin when it is finished bringeth forth death."

Our subject for discussion was the following:—Resolved, "That immortality is a gift from God, dependent on the character of the receiver." We adopted Mr. Webster's definition of immortality as follows:—"The quality of never ceasing to live or exist. Exemption from death and annihilation; life destined to endure without end."

In opposition to the resolution, Mr. Ballou laid down the following propositions, which we think were not sustained by the Scriptures or sound argument:—

1. "Immortality is a gift of God independent of character."

2. "Immortality is not a synonym for eternal life."

To this we replied, Mr Webster defines eternal as follows:—"Without beginning or end of existence." "Without end of existence, or duration; everlasting; endless; immortal." Immortal is defined by the words, "Endless, eternal, not mortal, undying and imperishable." Eternal is defined by the following words:—"Without end, endless, immortal, undying, and imperishable."

3. He assumed that, "Everlasting life is a divine principle, or spiritual element, rendering orderly moral natures eminently peaceful and blest."

To this we objected that he had attributed to "everlasting life" the work of the Holy Spirit. We found the Scriptures affirming that "eternal life" is "the gift of God" to those who obey him, and not something that causes us to live well. It is the reward for "well doing."

4. He asserted that, "Man may have eternal life in this world and lose it again."

No proof was given from Scripture or any other source.

5. "The body sown is not raised." "Resurrection does not consist in raising the body."

We found the Bible directly opposed to this sentiment, which says, when speaking of the resurrection, "God giveth . . . . to every seed his own body." Says Paul, "If there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen. And if Christ be not risen . . . then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are PERISHED." Says Jesus, "Marvel not at this; for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation." We endeavored to show our friend Ballou, that the Scriptures most plainly teach that our future life, if we die, depends entirely on the resurrection of the dead; and that christians who have died are "perished" if the dead rise not.

6. "The breath of life' is individualized after it enters the body by being associated with its finer particles, and thus becomes the real man, which lives on when the body has turned again to dust."

This was one of his principal points. In opposition to this, we found the Bible declaring that man and beast "have all one breath," without an intimation that our friend B.'s position was correct. He argued, or rather asserted, that after the breath enters either man or beast, it becomes the individual; and in the case of man, is all that survives the effects of death. He admitted that the breath was not a being when it came into the man, but was changed and formed into an immortal man, after it came in contact with man's physical organism. This was met with the remark that his immortal man was composed of "the breath of life" common to man and beast, and parts of the body of a mortal man; and we could not see how, on his own theory, that the union of the two constituted an immortal being. We think he saw [illegible] own theory. We could not help thinking how much twisting and turning it takes to give error even the semblance of truth; and after the very best of efforts, by the ablest of men, its hideous deformity is still apparent even to a careless observer.

He remarked that "this breath man" would go through any number of metallic coffins, or through the entire earth itself. We replied, if this be true, the entire man must go through one single pore between the particles in the various metallic coffins; or else be divided into many parts, each one of which would pass through a single pore. He thought the latter might be the case. But here his philosophy was opposed to all facts. When an organized being, (and it is absurd to suppose an unorganized one,) passes through a forest of trees or anything else, one part of him does not go one side of the tree, and another on the other side; but the entire being passes on the same side. Or, if he were crawling among rocks in the caverns of the earth, or coming up through the earth, as Mr. Ballou asserted the real man could do; in case the man comes to a narrow pass, he does not send one part of himself one side of the stone, and another part on the other side, while a third goes through another hole, and thus like a company of gentlemen finally meet together again in some place large enough to hold them all. And yet the absurdity must be believed, or else the whole man must be small enough to go through one single pore of a metallic coffin. We have yet to learn that man is a being smaller than the point of a cambric needle. As neither of these positions can be true, we argued that when a living man is inclosed in a metallic coffin and hermetically sealed before his death, the entire man is in the coffin, and dies for want of "the breath of life."

The following points were admitted by Mr. Ballou:—1. "No character is approved by God but one of moral goodness." 2. "Happiness depends on character." 3. "God can destroy us." 4. "Man is mortal as to his form." 5. "There is no question but the Bible speaks of men as dead." 6. "Eternal life is dependent upon the character of the receiver." 7. "There are texts with words that correspond with our views." 8. "Our position is supported by various portions of Scripture."

After a careful examination of the whole subject, we think the intelligent audience were satisfied that the Scriptures teach most plainly, that man is mortal in this state of existence, and may obtain immortality only through Christ "by patient continuance in well doing"; and that all the wicked will be destroyed; hence, "Immortality is a gift of God, dependent upon the character of the receiver."

A REQUEST.—When at New Bedford, Mass., we met Eld. James Taylor, a Christian preacher, who has been laboring in Cascade, Dubuque Co., Iowa, where a church has been established; but since he left for this city, they are without a shepherd to feed them. Bro. Taylor, in their behalf, wishes to request some of the western preachers to visit them, and administer the word of life to this flock of God.

Query.

Which Bible is right? ours or the Douay—the Catholic—in Matt. 26: 28, Mark 14: 24, and Luke 22: 20?

B. GREAVES.

These verses read as follows in the Douay Bible:—"For this is my blood of the new testament, which shall be shed," etc., instead of "is shed," as in King James' version. Wicklif's, Rheims and the Bishop's Bible read "shall be," as the Douay. It is a matter of uncertainty, and not important, as to which way it is translated. The old MSS. are not uniform. Some have the present tense of the verb, and others the future participle. The evidence is about equally divided, but rather preponderating in favor of "is shed," instead of "shall be shed." The former is supported by Tischendorf, who is considered the best editor, and with him agree Griesbach and Scholz.

If we adopt the present tense, as in our common version, it may indicate, by the figure of prolepsis, a future, but certain event. Such expressions are common in the Bible. Taken either way, no special point of doctrine is sustained or refuted.

Light Wanted on Rev. 22: 8.

Was it an angel or Christ who gave the Revelation to John?

The answer to this inquiry is obvious, when we turn to Rev. 1: 1, which reads as follows:—"The Revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto him, to shew unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass; and he sent and signified it by his angel unto his servant John." God gave a revelation to his Son; and he sent it by an angel to John upon the Isle of Patmos, who was instructed to write it "in a book, and send it unto the seven churches." We find no intimation that this angel was Christ, but plain statements to the contrary. Near the close of the instruction sent by the angel, John says, "I fell down to worship before the feet of the angel which showed me these things." Rev. 22: 8. This angel is one sent by Christ to John with the revelation that [illegible] to this world. This appears to be a very plain point.

Spiritualists sometimes argue from Rev. 22: 9, that this angel was one of the prophets. If we should admit this for argument's sake, it might be either Enoch or Elijah, who were translated and did not see death; but the Scriptures affirm no such thing as is claimed by the Spiritualists relative to this passage. It reads as follows:—"Then saith he [the angel] unto me, "See thou do it not; for I am thy fellow-servant, and of thy brethren the prophets." The oldest printed edition of the New Testament in English, which is Wm. Tyndale's, reads,—"I am thy fellow-servant and the fellow servant of thy brethren the prophets." The same idea is involved in our common version of this passage. This angel was not only a servant to John, but had been to other prophets. This might have been the one who instructed Daniel relative to the history of this world; but we find no proof that this angel was Christ, or one of the prophets.

For the Crisis.

Build Church Edifices.

BY D. T. TAYLOR.

Who? Why, Adventists to be sure. Why not? Are they not proper and needful? Do not other churches build them? I repeat it, erect houses in which to meet and worship God and preach Christ's coming and kingdom. They are far too rare in all our land. Not because there is not material enough or money enough to build them, but on account of a lack of energy, enterprise, and a determination to "rise and build." All over the northern states there are Advent churches who are dependent on other denominations, or on some grumbling set of trustees, for a place to meet in conference or to hold a funeral service. A reluctant consent is given the most of us to occupy their houses, because we are too often accounted as heretics to whom no favor should be allowed. Doors are opened to us grudgingly. The minister sometimes refuses to sit with us in the pulpit. And if we preach God's whole truth without any catering or fear, the result is the doors are thereafter closed against us; and if we seek a second favor, we only get nays and frowns. Hence each church, if able to build, should have a house of their own. A church without a house, is like a town without a town-house, like sheep without a pen, like a family having no home. At present, very few of our churches own a decent or comfortable place of worship. Most of them crowd into private houses, school-houses, or barns, or else go into borrowed meeting houses, and groves. We have the best form of God's glorious gospel, and the most sublime system of divine truth that ever fell to the ear of mortals. Is it not worthy of a good place in which to proclaim it? And ought we to be dependent on those who, if they could, would quickly crush out and extirpate our grand doctrines from the land? Nay. This dependence is, in numerous instances, of course, a matter of sheer necessity; but in very many cases it might be otherwise, provided there was a will. I know of churches worth $50,000, or even $75,000, who meet in halls, high up in some second or third story, where old and feeble folks dread to go. A crew of rowdies disturbs their quiet, perhaps. Their prayer-meetings go a begging for a proper and quiet spot. I know of churches worth $20,000, worshiping in some out-of-the-way corner of the town, where nobody can find them without a search, as though they were ashamed to be seen by the community generally. I know of some churches in cities, and elsewhere, who have paid rent-money enough in the past ten years to have built them a good house. Others crowd into low, dirty school-houses, where the preacher, if he happens to be tall, is obliged to breathe over the air first breathed and de-oxygenated by a hundred persons who sit below him. I have preached in such miasmatic places, and often been strongly reminded of the humorous clergyman, who as often as he insisted on having God's pure free air to breathe while in the pulpit, would as often be defeated in his wishes by some one among his congregation closing every door and window, until he at last, in a state of desperation, observed that he verily believed if he was preaching in a junk-bottle they would persist in putting in the stopple.

Nothing injured my vocal powers and general health so much, during the first two years of my ministry, as speaking in low, close, unventilated rooms. Exposure to cool air follows, and as a natural result laryngitis, pharyngitis, bronchitis ensues—perhaps for life.

Furthermore, I know of one church—I write it to their shame—who began to build, got out the timber, appointed a committee, nearly selected the site, talked big about "their new house," and then got into wrangle about ways and means, gave it up, and utterly abandoned the whole thing,—becoming the laughing-stock of the whole town and the derision of the devil. I know of those who would refuse, most miserly, to aid a cent in building, just because the house was not erected precisely on the spot where they, in their selfishness, wanted it. I know of rich [illegible] build, would perplex, discourage, and bother the whole body for months, because they would have the house built just where it was not wanted, when eighteen out of twenty wanted it put up somewhere else.

This is all folly; nay, more, it is wicked, On the other hand, I know of a church, worth some $20,000, perhaps, who resolutely erected a house worth $3000, and paid for it. The enemy clamored loudly; nevertheless they, like a Thermopylaean band, hold their own and flourish. I know of a church where one member, worth about $4000, took one fourth of his property, built a good house with it, and told the brethren to occupy it. This was in the right spirit. And that people have been and still are, a live, working, prosperous people. Where there's a will there's a way. You may say "we have no means." But I ask, do you want a house? and have you made the first effort? Suppose then you curtail some of those useless expenses. Take off a few of the silks and satins. Use less tobacco. Drink less tea and coffee. Buy fewer vanities and nick-nacks. Grant your children less finery to make them proud. Cease to purchase all the property adjacent to yours, and thus keep out of that human curse called Debt. Sell some of that costly furniture that stands as inert, dead property in some splendid parlor, all for show, never used oftener than once in six months, and the rest time kept under lock and key—not even a fly being admitted. Then put the savings and proceeds into the Lord's coffers to build Him a house for his name. So shall ye receive a hundred fold of the Lord's kind of good things in this life, and in the coming world life forever. Should you feel reluctant, stingy or discouraged, then read Exod. 25: 21-9; Ezra 2: 20; 1st Tim. 6: 17-19, etc., and remember you are doing a good work, one that entitles you to the divine blessing. Therefore have faith in God.

The building and owning of a house of worship by our people has many things in its favor to recommend it. First,—there is a moral power in it. Every timber, every stone, every brick preaches. It sounds afar. Men are made to know you exist and mean to exist. They are given to understand that you mean in spite of opposition to become a permanent religious fixture in the place,—that you don't intend to die out. Thus you, respecting yourself and your noble faith, compel others to respect you and it also. Second,—It makes you independent, bold, and manly. You don't go sneaking around, ashamed of your nothingness and looking as though you wanted to apologize to the very devil for your ecclesiastical and individual existence.—You will thenceforward grow. I have yet to learn where our people have erected a respectable house of worship, that in that place our cause has become extinct. Third,—you will be furnished with a permanent religious home. You become established. Consequently you feel less like a strayed or lost sheep. If you wish to pray you can kneel around your own church altar. If you want to bury your dead, you have a place in which to preach "Jesus and the resurrection," and none have a right to find fault or grumble at your freedom. If you desire a grand general conference, you will have a place to hold it without going a house begging, or be thrust out into the storm. Fourth, it will honor the Master who is soon to come. To say that you will deny your faith thereby, is but a trick of the enemy. If Christ is at hand, better put your money into a house in which to tell the perishing world this glad, solemn story, than to invest it in railroad stocks, banks and manufacturing companies, where your life is tormented day and night for fear some rascal will embezzle or cheat you out of it, or else run away with it. It will increase your percentage and dividends a million fold—in the Kingdom. He may come in six or eight years; what is that to thee? Do thou build Him a house. And if he come next year, so much the more need. The advent is an argument in favor of building. We ought to have a hundred pulpits, in less than a twelve month from this, where we now have one. Don't go into an unhallowed fellowship with some Universalist society, or other worldly clique, for the sake of getting the means to build. Better not build at all. Keep good company. Yet as Hiram of Tyre assisted Israel to build a temple to God's glory, so you need not refuse the aid of any who are friendly to the world, even outsiders. You say you love the cause. Well, do you not recollect a score of instances where a dedication was immediately followed by a revival? Therefore begin now. Be zealous. Have a little pious spunk, some earnestness, and much self-sacrifice in the noble enterprise.

Brethren in the Lord, build houses of worship, not to worship the house, but to worship God in it. Build them comfortable; build them commodious; build them pleasant; build them airy. Build them according to the laws of ventilation, with a register or ventilator in the ceiling to let off the bad air, and with windows that can be lowered at the top, as well as lifted at the bottom. Build them, with steeples or without them. Build them with carpets on the aisles, not to foster pride, but neatness instead, and to add stillness to sacredness. Build them with a pulpit, if you please, (that sacred tub behind which, says H. W. Beecher, a minister is wont to hide his awkwardness,) or, which is better, with only a moving and adjustable stand or frame for the large Bible, leaving a good platform free to be occupied by—it is to hoped—a meek, bold, live gospel-orator. Be sure, anyway, and have wooden pulpits with golden ministers, instead of golden pulpits and wooden ministers. Build them with an independent pulpit, and not a sectarian pen. Build with free seats, giving the poor as good a seat as the rich. Build in the right place to get an audience, if it does cost money. Build in harmony and peace, without getting into a quarrel before you get through. "Beware of the old black bull." Build and not incur a long standing debt, weighing you down like a millstone. Build a church edifice to the glory of God. Then give it to the Coming One as a house of prayer. So shall He bless you.

And what you do, do it quickly, for the Master and King is before the door.

Pre-existence of Jesus.

What is it to pre-exist? Ans. "To exist beforehand, or before something else."

Do any understand that Jesus, the Son of God existed before he did exist? We think not; but they evidently intend to convey the simple idea that he existed "before the world was"; (John 17: 5,) that is, before "Kosmos"—or the universe was.—If this is their meaning, I would like to have any one holding this opinion answer the following questions:—

1. Which was the first Adam, the one "formed of the dust of the ground? (Gen. 2: 7,) or the one "from heaven"? (1 Cor. 15: 45—47.)

2. If the one made of the dust was the first, would he not, if he had lived, been older than the "second,"—the one from heaven?

3. If the "earthy" Adam was older than the "heavenly" Adam, would not the "first" Adam, had he lived, been more than four thousand years older than the "second" Adam?

4. If "Jesus," was only "eight days" old when he was circumcised; (Luke 2: 21,) or "twelve years old," when he went up to Jerusalem; (Luke 2: 42,) or "about thirty years of age," when he was baptized; (Luke 3: 23,) is he now more than one thousand, eight hundred and sixty-five years old?

5. If the "first," or oldest Adam did not pre-exist "before the world was," how could the "second," or youngest Adam, pre-exist "before the world was"?

Correspondence.

From Eld. O. R. Fassett.

Bro. Grant:—Having closed my labors in Westboro', Mass., I have removed to West Poland, Me. The brethren in this state have long desired that I should come among them and labor in this part of the Lord's great vineyard, either as a general missionary or as a pastor of some one of their churches. At last the Lord has opened the way and I have cheerfully consented to the solicitation of the brethren, and have located by the request of the church in this place (West Poland,) as their pastor. While I shall endeavor to build up this individual church on their most holy faith, and labor for the conversion of men and the good of this immediate vicinity, I do not design to limit my labors to this particular region, but shall help our brethren throughout the state of Maine. I design to attend their General and Quarterly Conferences in different sections of the state, and work in harmony with all our brethren in different parts who are endeavoring to extend the knowledge of the gospel of the kingdom in this destitute region.

I shall also try to visit Canada East occasionally, as I am located near that province, and thus meet the wishes of many brethren in those regions beyond, who are desirous of my labors among them. I had intended to have visited Canada East during the last summer or fall, but was hindered; but I hope to meet the wishes of the brethren in that section hereafter, if our Lord permits.

I want the the brethren and sisters all abroad to be acquainted with my present locality and to remember me in their prayers, that the Lord will aid me in the publishing of his gospel in these parts, and that he will visit this whole region with the gracious influence of his Spirit and truth, until he comes to save his waiting people. Brethren, pray for us, for we would be faithful to the end and with you be prepared to meet our coming Lord with lamps trimmed and burning.

West Poland, Me., Dec. 1st, 1860.

From J. M. Saunders.

Bro. Grant:—Our little church in this place is prospering. One year ago an Advent church was scarcely known in these parts. It is some over two years since the Advent doctrine was preached in this village. Our dear Bro. Turner, a faithful young minister, commenced to sow the seed of truth, and I think it has taken deep root in the hearts of many, and will bring forth fruit to the Master here. Our church was organized with seven members. Our numbers have increased to twenty-seven. Thanks be to God for the increase! and there are others waiting for an opportunity to obey the commands of Christ in baptism. It greatly rejoices the brethren to see the truth gaining ground. Although we have much to contend against, infidels, Universalists and Orthodox combined, thanks be to God! brethren, we have the weapon that can resist all the foes they can bring against us, even God's Word. We expect to stand the storm and do what we can with our feeble means. Let us all work while the day lasts; for soon the night cometh in which no man can work.

Ironton, Wis.

From P. H. Lawrence.

Dearly Beloved, called to be saints, greeting:—I seize the passing moment to communicate to you the blessed tidings of the visitation of the Holy Spirit. But gratitude swells my heart so that I hardly know where to commence. We returned from the Danville meeting to our stricken family, bearing up under our bereavement as best we could, and committed our way unto the Lord with renewed zeal, and said, "Although the fig-tree shall not blossom, neither shall fruit be in the vine," etc. We went to our appointment the following Sabbath, and from that day, the blessed word began to move with more interest. Still we struggled with God in faithful, believing prayers and entreaties until the power of conviction drove out some seven or eight young people, among which were our three eldest children, like the trembling jailor to cry out, "What shall we do to be saved?" This was followed by others, and a deep interest has been stirred in the minds of the people. About this time God was pleased to send us a brother full of the Holy Ghost and faith, a brother from the state of Vermont, and upon last Sabbath, notwithstanding the storm of wind and snow, we led six happy persons down the banks of Jordan and planted them in the likeness of Jesus' death. Among them were our three eldest, for whom much prayer had been made. Oh! beloved brethren, it was a solemn scene. Fond parents wept aloud for joy, while some of the most hardened sinners and backsliders were melted in tears. We expect to see greater things yet, for we like Jonathan of old, see that God can save by many or by few.

Blessed be the name of that God, who has beheld our reproach that we in Lawrenceville have suffered as believers in the soon coming and reign of the blessed Christ and has answered prayer in the salvation of precious young men and women. And here let me say to every one, if you have friends unconverted, do not despair; the prayer of faith will at length prevail with God, and you will hear him say, See! I have given thee these also. His promises are for us upon whom the ends of the world are come.

Obituary Notices.

Died, at Warwick, R I., Oct 21st, Sarah Ellen Gray, wife of Andrew Gray, and daughter of Samuel Graves, at her father's house, aged twenty-eight years

After four weeks of extreme suffering, borne with fortitude and patience, she quietly fell asleep, being delivered from the fear of death, and having hope of eternal life through Jesus Christ the Savior May the God of all grace sustain the afflicted friends in this great sorrow. H. L. H.

Died, in Suncook, N. H., Nov. 9th, 1860, of typhoid fever, Joseph H., son of John B and Hannah E. Paine, aged seventeen years and four months.

Our son became interested in the Advent faith in 1854, but time passing, he became careless again. He was taken sick at North Andover, Mass., and hoping to get better, he staid till he was just able to get home, he was deranged most of the time, and lived only ten days after reaching home. But the Lord heard prayer for him, and gave him his reason. A few hours before he died, he prayed and sung—

"He is able, he is willing, doubt no more."

I said, "You will not doubt, son, will you?" "No! praise the Lord,

'He is able, he is willing, doubt no more.'"

He then sung with us one verse of another hymn,

"Thou dear Redeemer, dying Lamb,
I love to hear of thee;
No music like thy charming name,
Nor half so sweet can be."

In about an hour before he died, he answered and said, "I am safe, I am safe, Jesus saves me, Jesus saves me. Amen, Amen, A-m-e-n!" the last words heard. So we mourn not as those that have no hope.

His funeral was attended by Bro. T. M. Preble of Concord, N. H., in the Methodist house. He preached from Job 14: 10,—"Man giveth up the ghost, and where is he?" He showed from Scripture that man will receive his reward at the resurrection of the just.

John B. Paine.

Died, in Hartford, Ct., Nov. 18th, Deacon Aaron Clapp, aged fifty-nine years.

Bro. C. was born in East Hampton, Mass., was converted some thirty-two years since in Hartford, under the labors of Rev. W. Bentley, and united with the first Baptist church of that city, in which communion he served as deacon for several years. In 1842, he embraced the views of the pre-millennial advent, shortly after which his relation to the Baptist church was changed, and he became prominently identified with the Adventists, with whom he remained till he died. His disease, which was bilious fever, continued five weeks, during which time he was perfectly conscious and calm, giving directions as though preparing for a journey. He assured his wife just previous to his death, that he was fully prepared to go; and that probably there never would be a better time "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord." Bro. C. leaves a wife, three daughters, four sisters, a sorrowing church and many friends to mourn his absence. Bro. C. was respected as a consistent, devoted christian, by those who knew him; and among the many pleasant and gratifying circumstances connected with his death, not the least was the large assemblage of sympathizing friends who were present at the funeral services. Rev. R. Turnbull, of the First Baptist church, and Rev. E. Beadle, of the Pearl street Congregational church, assisted the writer in the funeral obsequies.

The sympathy of praying hearts is solicited in behalf of a stricken family, and a church which during the past eighteen months has been afflicted in the death of seven of its most valued members, and among the number its two deacons. "But they died in faith," and a better resurrection awaits them. L. Osler.—Advent Herald.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

[Advices of the 23d ult. per Canadian.]

ITALY.

The position of affairs was unchanged. No new movement had been reported.

The clergy of the Neapolitan provinces were paying homage to Victor Emmanuel.

The Cardinal Archbishop of Naples was about to return to his See.

It was reported that Gen. Guyon had declared that he would not deliver the material taken from the Bourbon troops who took refuge in the Roman States either to Francis II. or to Victor Emmanuel. Negotiations were, however, progressing on the subject.

The siege of Gaeta continued. The batteries of Capuccini and Santa Agota had been placed in position to definitely reduce the place. The Piedmontese bombarded the suburbs on the 12th. The Neapolitan troops continued to fight resolutely, but the defection among the staff officers was increasing.

Colonel Pianelli and his battalion of Chasseurs had surrendered to the Piedmontese. The further resistance of the Bourbon troops was paralyzed by the insubordination of the troops and the confusion which prevailed. It was believed that the complete evacuation of Gaeta had been resolved on.

Explanations are said to have been asked of Piedmont by France as to whether it was with its sanction that Garibaldi signified his intention to attack Vienna in the spring.

The plan attributed to Garibaldi is to land his troops on the Dalmatian coast, and from thence pass into Montenegro and raise the population, in order to compel the Austrians to keep a considerable force on that side, while the Piedmontese are busy before Venetia.

The statement was current that the British government had intimated to France its intention of recognizing the new kingdom of Italy, and that Napoleon had signified his willingness, provided it was postponed until the King of Naples had evacuated Gaeta.

Sardinia claims the cannon taken from the 16,000 Neapolitans disarmed in the Papal territory, but a commission composed of French and Sardinian officers had been appointed to settle all questions connected with this matter.

Reactionary movements had taken place. It was stated that five Neapolitan provinces were in a state of siege on account of the movements of the anti-annexationists. The province of Alvazzi had partly risen in insurrection.

From Southern Italy there is no new report, save of continued anarchy in the rural districts and disaffection in the capital. The Muratist party is stated to be gaining strength, and they point to French intervention at Gaeta as a proof that they are backed by the Emperor. The Garibaldians and Mazzinians also still continue their bad work. "No words of mine," says a foreign correspondent, "convey, to the full extent, the agitation to which the country is a prey, or the unscrupulous virulence of the attacks directed against the government, both in the North and South of the Peninsula."

AUSTRIA.

Letters speak of a guaranty from the German confederation, joined by Russia, for the securing of Venetia to Austria, as necessary to the safety of Germany.

[Two days later, per Asia.]

CHINA.

Hostilities had recommenced in the North. Several skirmishes had been had with the Tartar cavalry, who were repulsed in every instance.

The allied army was waiting in hostile attitude before Pekin. Negotiations had been opened by the Chinese, but not in a supplicatory manner.

There has been no new movement in Italy.

A vague report was in circulation that negotiations had been commenced in Paris for the cession of Venetia.

VENETIA.

The Turin correspondent of the London Times writes:

"There is a universal feeling that a compromise with Austria about Venice is an utter impossibility, and that war must needs break out at the very earliest beginning of next spring. I know of some men who deem it unwise to put off the contest even for these few months, for they think that Austria is not unlikely before next February or March to recover from the utter prostration into which she is now fallen; but wiser men, like General Turr, well know that the question of Venice is almost sure to involve in the quarrel those stolid Germans who think that their 'natural' frontier is in the heart of Italy, and that 'the Reine is best defended on the Mincio.'"

ITALY.

The Italian correspondent of the London Daily News announces that the question of the southern army disbandment has been satisfactorily settled. Count Cavour has overruled General Fanti's order of the day, which was tantamount to a peremptory disbandment of Garibaldi's army. Its cadres will be kept as the nucleus, as a corps around whose flag will gather the volunteers, who shall be called forth to fight the last war against Austria. A hope is expressed that Garibaldi may now be induced to leave his retirement at Caprera and come once more amidst his old companions in arms.

Garibaldi on the Pope.—On the 30th of October Garibaldi made a short address to the people of Naples, in response to calls from those in the streets who knew him to be in a house near by. His remarks, and especially the way in which they were received are significant:

"This is a memorable day for you, for it cements the alliance of the two peoples and establishes the fraternity of the people. To-day you have destroyed that principle of egotism which has kept the nations separated, and thus has facilitated the servitude of all. The people with whom you have fraternized to-day have the same enemies who threaten you. Your cause is theirs, and theirs is yours.

"But before fighting against this enemy outside you have internal enemies to beat down, and I will tell you that the chief of them is the Pope. If I have acquired any merit with you, I have acquired that of telling you the truth frankly, and without a veil. In using this privilege I tell you that your chief enemy is the Pope.

I am a christian as you are; yes, I am of that religion which has broken the bonds of slavery and has proclaimed the freedom of men; the Pope who oppresses his subjects and is an enemy of Italian independence is no christian; he denies the very principle of christianity—he is the Antichrist.

This truth you must spread among all those who are near to you, for it is only when all Italians shall be thoroughly convinced of this truth that Italy will be free and united."

Garibaldi had several times to interrupt his speech on account of the applause which his words elicited from the multitude below.

The idea has been broached of the Emperor becoming one day the head of the church in France, and uniting in his own person absolute power in spirituals as in temporals. This innovation is, as previously mentioned, advocated in a pamphlet which Dentu has issued, and which is from the pen of a journalist named Cayla, whose conclusions are as follows:

"Victoria of England is Queen and Pope (Reine et Papesse) The King of Prussia is King and Pope. The Protestant Sovereigns of of the Germanic Confederation exercise at the same time political and religious power. In Sweden, Denmark, and Norway, the Kings are Popes. Alexander II, Emperor of Russia, is Czar and Pontiff. Otho of Bavaria is King and Pope at Athens. The Sultan of the Turks is Emperor and Pope. And we must add, that in nearly all these States, especially in England and Prussia, the union of the two powers has promoted the development of the national instincts and of liberty. Does not England enjoy constitutional immunities? Is not Prussia at the head of German liberalism?

What is useful for others will be good and useful for our dear France, a land so fertile in all grand and generous ideas. In the name, then, of the country and of the national will; in the name of religion, endangered by ambitions which have no longer any reason for their existence, in the name of human progress inaugurated in 1789—in the name of tolerance and free will—the two great laws of modern times—in the name of the security for all, and of peace—let the head of the State at last unite in one and the same grasp the political power and the administration of public worship. Let the political government in future have no longer two distinctive centres—Paris and Rome—that is to say two centres of civilization and obscurantism. Let the French clergy, as the only body combining the science and the morality necessary to direct public worship, no longer receive its inspirations from abroad, but from its conscience and its patriotism. The priest should be above all a citizen, and serve the State which pays him. Rome is a factitious country; the moment is come to declare for France."

Independent American Catholics.—The Richmond Whig says there has recently been organized in that city a religious society or congregation, styled as the above, the object of which is to dissever all connection with the Pope of Rome and his Bishops; and, in fact, to repudiate and protest against the Roman hierarchy in every form It is composed chiefly of French and German citizens. This is the first move to establish an Independent Catholic Church in America, and bids fair to increase in strength and importance, as large numbers of adopted and native citizens in every State of the Union are expected to organize similar congregations.

Change of Time for Yarmouth Meeting.

The brethren and sisters in this place, feeling anxious to make extra efforts to save souls and help along the cause of the Lord in this vicinity, propose having a protracted meeting in "Institute Hall," commencing Jan. 18th, 1861, at 6 1-2 o'clock in the evening, and continuing as long as may be thought best. Brethren O. R. Fassett, and other ministering brethren are expected to be present to preach the word; and we cordially invite brethren and sisters generally, to come to the meeting to labor together for the good of souls. We shall do what we can to take care of all who come. In behalf of all interested, R. R. York.

Yarmouth, Me., Dec. 3d, '60.

Notice.

The next quarterly meeting of the Rhode Island State Conference is to be held in Providence, in New Market Hall, Wednesday, Dec. 26th, 1860, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon precisely, the Lord permitting.

Joseph D. Brown, Clerk.

Notice.

For the Crisis.

Beyond.

There'll be no woes in heaven,
No dreary hour of pain and gloom,
No hearts by grief and anguish riven,
As here beside the tomb.

No tear shall ever moisten there
The eye lit up by love and joy,
No sorrow mark the b ow with care,
That here our peace destroy.

No disappointments chill the breast,
No friends of folly prove;
No death to break that heavenly rest
Where dwells eternal love.

Oh! may that rest be mine
When life's dark scenes are o'er,
May I for aye a mansion find
On Canaan's happy shore.

That rest is all I ask;
That blissful hour I know will come,
When heaven its glories shall unmask,
And e'er like Eden bloom.

For the Crisis.

"Alas! Master, for it was borrowed."

The fact is astonishing, that a vast amount of all that appears lovely and noble is, "Alas! borrowed"; so many sail under false colors, that the honest are in danger of not appreciating men of real piety, unhappily becoming distrustful, which narrows and sours the mind. Consequently it is better to be deceived, than never to trust, for "counterfeits prove that virtue and purity really exist." For instance, one is captivated by the meek spirit and modest deportment of a christian. It is right that he should admire, even covet the inward adorning that makes him outwardly fair; but instead of tracing this beautiful, crystal stream to its source, he hews to himself a broken cistern that can hold no water, imitating the goodly gift, or affecting a spirit which he does not possess, which is often detected by the wise, and like all borrowed things, brings the wearer into disrepute, besides provoking the anger of a just God, who has said, "Buy of me gold tried in the fire," etc. Still there are some whited sepulchres that look tolerably well, and borrowed graces may be made to sit quite easily by habit, until the wearer may forget that it is merely the dress instead of the principle, which he has borrowed of the just; hence their danger as well as folly, for in security they may sleep until "the fire shall try every man's work."

But these are only small items of the mass that is borrowed. How often are we disgusted by borrowed sermons, and writings of every sort, even praying ("tell it not in Gath"!). Alas! little but surface work is found. Happy would it be for mortals, if, instead of grasping the shadow, they would secure the substance, covet the best gifts, instead of the showy, the jewel instead of the tinsel. Where are the "living epistles read and known of all men?" The borrowers take more pains not to be read, than it would take to be just what they would love to have men think them to be. And lastly, when deception will no longer avail, I fear there are many that will be compelled to confess that they have none of the spontaneous fruits of a good tree. That sermon, that gained for me the reputation of a godly man, an eloquent, soul-stirring preacher, was only a little scion borrowed from Henry Ward Beecher. The prayer that moved thousands, as the forest is moved by a mighty wind, was copied from Bishop H.

But not the preacher only is wearing false colors, lay members ape their superiors; they dare not take a position unless Bro A. adopts it, or Sr. B. approves; in short they "love greeting in the market places" as well as the old Pharisees; but, thank God, there are a few that dare to be honest men, that had rather sacrifice life than principle, that bribes cannot corrupt, neither can they be bought with honors; they cannot be made to sit when they ought to stand, nor keep silence when God bids them speak. They are frequently called stubborn; the martyrs were called obstinate; undoubtedly they thought Christ to be so, when he would not answer Pilate.

We certainly need men of will in these corrupting times, with minds that will not bend to serve an unholy cause, with purpose firm as the everlasting hills, to attack the strong holds of Satan, anywhere, even at the foot of the altar. There are champions that do not fear to attack "wickedness in high places." They are wise master-builders, and they do build, instead of pulling down. Follow them and you will find light in their track; where they stop, the cloud rests.

Again, they are not the complainers, they settle their bill with God, and do not disgrace their Master by slandering the household. If any profess to be his brother and is covetous, he tells him plainly into what harbor he will sail, and leaves it with his Father, as he should, and when the trial day comes, he will stand; with the righteous nation will enter in through the gates, and be justly crowned a king—an overcomer. VESTA N. CUDWORTH.

For the Crisis.

One Baptism.

The apostle Paul teaches there is one Lord, one faith, one baptism. Now it is certain that if the baptism of the Holy Spirit is the one baptism, then there is no such thing (or command) as water baptism. Did Jesus command believers of the gospel to be baptized with the Holy Spirit, or in water as he set them example, when he was baptized by John in Jordan?—Matt. 28: 19, 20; Mark 16: 15, 16. Did Paul baptize those disciples he found at Ephesus, into the Holy Spirit? or did they not receive the Holy Spirit after he had baptized them? Did not Philip baptize the Eunuch in water? And who instructed the Eunuch concerning water baptism, if Philip did not? And if Peter may have erred on the day of Pentecost, when he instructed those who inquired of him what they must do to be saved, to repent and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit, can the same charge be brought against Philip and Paul?

1. Baptism includes a burial and a rising up to "newness of life." "Buried with him in baptism, wherein ye are risen with him"—Col. 2: 12; 3: 1—4; Rom. 6: 3—5; Acts 8: 12, 35, 38.

2. Baptism is the "form" or type of gospel doctrine:—Rom. 6: 17. The gospel, as preached by Paul in 1 Cor. 15: 1-4, is that "Jesus died for our sins—was buried, and rose again" according to the Scriptures. Baptism gives it a formal expression.

3. Obedience to Jesus in this ordinance, honors the gospel. It makes our life, death, and resurrection a reality; those "buried" in the waters of baptism," could never "walk in newness of life," if they were not "raised up" from the water, to that end. So also, "if the dead in Christ are not to be raised, then they are PERISHED." All depends on the resurrection.

4. No other act of obedience secures a distinct promise of a resurrection. "If we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection."—Rom. 6: 5. That "likeness" of Christ's "death" and burial, that being "planted" in the likeness of his, (Christ's) "death" is stated in the preceding verse to be "buried with him in baptism."

We will give unquestionable testimony from the men of past ages. Rosenmuller says: "Immersion in the water of baptism, and coming forth out of it, was a symbol of a person's renouncing his former life, and, on the contrary, beginning a new one. The learned have rightly reminded us, that on account of this emblematical meaning of baptism, the rite of immersion ought to have been retained in the Christian Church."

Martin Luther, after speaking of baptism as a symbol of death and resurrection, says: "On this account I could wish that such as are to be baptized should be completely immersed into water, according to the meaning of the word; and the signification of the ordinance, as also, without doubt it was instituted by Christ.

Dr. Knapp, an eminent and pious German divine, says: "We are like Christ, buried as dead persons, by baptism, and should arise like him, to a new life."

Dr. Bloomfield, one of the most profound Biblical scholars of Great Britain, says: "We have been thus buried in the waters of baptism." He adds: "There is a plain allusion to the ancient custom of baptism by immersion."

Barnabas, the companion of Paul, says: "We descend into the water, and come out of it."

Justin Martyr: "Those who believe are led to some place where there is water, and then bathe in the water." In another place, he says: "We represent our Lord's sufferings and resurrection by baptism in a pool."

Tertullian: "We are immersed in water—let down into the water and dipped—Peter immersed in the Tiber."

Dionysius Areopag: "The total concealment in water fitly represents Christ's death and burial."

Chrysostom: "We, as in a sepulchre immersing our heads in water, the old man is buried and sinking down, the whole is concealed at once, then, as we immerge, the new man again rises."

Jerome: "Three times we are immersed."

Augustine: "Rightly are ye immersed three times, who have received baptism in the name of Christ."

Neander: "Baptism was originally by immersion."

Tholuck, on Rom. 6: 4 says: "In order to understand the figurative use of baptism, we must bear in mind the well known fact, that the candidate in the primitive church was immersed in water, and raised out of it again."

Winer: "In the apostolic age, baptism was by immersion."

Bretschneider: "The apostolic church baptized only by immersion."

Schleusner, Wahl, and Bretschneider, the three great New Testament lexicographers of Germany, limit baptism, as a sacred ordinance, to immersion.

Wahn: "According to apostolic instruction and example, baptism was performed by immersing the whole body."

Prof. Lange: "Baptism in the apostolic age was a proper baptism; the immersion of the whole body in water. Plunging under water represents death, and the rising out of it, the resurrection to a new life."

In short, from the days of the apostles downwards for 1800 years, we have an unbroken chain of evidence, showing that baptism was performed by immersion, and by immersion only. Now, who would set at nought such testimony, if it were given on the subject of no immortality out of Christ? Is such testimony good for anything when it is in harmony with revelation, which shines as clear as the light of the noonday sun, on this most glorious subject, which represents in figure the death and resurrection of Christ our life giver? If any wish more testimony, and can procure the German book of Martyrs, they will there find, that the united testimony of the Church from the first ages of primitive christianity down through succeeding centuries, all sustain the testimony already given, that baptism by immersion in water is the "one baptism" spoken of by Paul. And with all christian kindness I would ask how believers are buried in baptism by or with the Spirit? And in being baptized with the Spirit, are they planted in the likeness of Christ's death? If Christ did not command baptism by immersion, when he commissioned his apostles to go and preach the gospel, and to observe all things whatsoever he commanded, what did he command? And why did his apostles teach and practice baptism by immersion if Christ did not set them the example when he went down into the Jordan and was baptized?

I am a firm believer in the comforting influences of the Holy Spirit, and unless we possess that spirit, we have no promise of having these mortal bodies made like unto Christ's glorified body; but I remain in strong doubt that the "one baptism" spoken of by Paul is the baptism of the Holy Spirit, and until stronger proof is given than I have yet seen I must believe as I do. The Prayer Meeting.

I love the house of prayer,
Where Jesus deigns to bless
The ones who call on Him their care,
And all their guilt confess.

I love the house of prayer,
Where saints together meet,
With Jesus' sacred presence there,
They hold communion sweet.

I love the house of prayer,
Where all with one accord,
In sweet submission to His will,
Bow down before their Lord.

I love the house of prayer,
I would be there alway,
I found the blessed Savior there—
'T was there I learned to pray.

Tower of the Flock.---Micah 4: 8.

The tower of the flock, spoken of in this verse, is generally thought to mean Christ; but I think this is a mistake. In the 5th chap. of 2 Sam. 7th verse, it reads thus: "Nevertheless David took the stronghold of Zion, the same is the city of David." Now what is the tower of the flock? The Word says, "The stronghold of the daughter of Zion." What is "the stronghold of the daughter of Zion"? Ans.—"The city of David." That is all there is about it according to the Word. All can see that the "tower of the flock" is "the city of David." This city was in the hands of the Jebusites. It seems to have been a small city within Jerusalem, strongly walled in; but David's army broke into it and afterwards the same was called "the city of David." He had his throne in this city. Here Christ will have his throne. Here will begin the first kingly rule of Christ. Here he takes possession; here he begins his reign over the Jews of Israel. For this end he was born to be king of the Jews. He does not say he was born to be king of the Gentiles. The Gentiles seem to be only adopted children; are not the olive tree, but grafted into it and share with the Jews in the same inheritance.

Selections.

The Spirit the Author of Reality in Religion.

To see this, let us consider in what the sense or feeling of reality consists;—the conviction and assurance of reality or realism, in any field or sphere, whether material or mental; whether in camp or council; in a word, in any pursuit or interest cognizable by man. Into what must we finally resolve our conviction of reality? To what must we ultimately trace up that impression or assurance?

Clearly—metaphysical speculation apart—to a certain correspondence between the object apprehended and the subject apprehending; a certain accordancy or mutual suitableness. Between the qualities of matter, for instance, and the senses of the human body by which we perceive these qualities, there is a certain correspondence or adaptation, by reason of which matter becomes to us, necessarily, in our apprehension, no shadowy, abstract, airy semblance, but an actual, existent, real thing. Between the phenomena of sound and the human ear there is a relation which inevitably begets the conviction that the sounds I hear are real; not ideal and imaginary, the echoes of dream-land. If they be musical sounds,—the performance on a many-stringed instrument of one that can handle it well,—they will be real to me only as sounds, and not as music, unless I have a mental sense or faculty, a musical ear or taste, corresponding to their quality as musical; as the literal ear is adapted to their more general character as sounds merely. Why is it that, to the merchant, prices, and markets, and rumors of markets come home with all the impression of intense reality? It is because there is a corresponding habit and character of mind in such a one. There is a relation and suitableness between the subject mind and the object presented to it; in virtue whereof the impression of reality springs up immediately when subject and object come together.

And it is so in every sphere of knowledge or of contemplation.

If therefore, the character and glory of God—his authoritative claim to your love by your exceeding sinfulness in refusing it; if the fact of your condemnation,—the substitution and righteousness of Christ,—his redeeming love and faithfulness; if faithfulness, if forgiveness of sin,—adoption,—the light of God's countenance,—the joy of his salvation and the comforts of his Spirit; if the beauty of holiness—the goodness of God's law—and the rewards of his favor: if these are to you as yet but shadows and ideas and unrealities, it is because between your spirit and these things of God's Spirit there is no suitableness, no living relation, no true answerableness or adaptation or correspondency.

But the Spirit of the Lord can give these things great reality in your estimation and conviction. For he can establish a glorious correspondency. Between these objective or outward "deep things of God," on the one hand, and your mind, as the active subject engaged in contemplating and dealing with them, on the other; the Spirit can create a living and blessed answerableness. He has these deep things of God in his keeping. They are his own,—"the things of the Spirit." He has your spirit in his keeping also, and at his full and sovereign disposal. He can frame it into the very image and character and glory of God. He can fashion it into the very figure and mould of God's holy law, and give unto it the leading attributes and tone of "the deep things of God."

And then,—when the character and glory of God are outwardly presented to your mind, itself now formed in that same glorious character;—when the authority of God is held up to you in imposing that safe holy law which is now within your heart; and sin is held up to you as the transgression of that holy law; and Christ's atoning blood and surety-righteousness, as magnifying that holy law; and forgiveness, with acceptance, even complete justification, as following from that holy law having been magnified and made honorable; the sovereign love of God, also, as originating all this redemption, and the light of his countenance as following in its train; with the peace that passeth understanding, and the joy that is unspeakable and full of glory, and the hope that maketh not ashamed, and the rest that remaineth; oh! then, because of the exact correspondency between your inner man as formed anew of the Spirit, on the one hand, and these things of the self-same Spirit, on the other, there is in all your soul an impression;—not inferential, but direct; not the fruit of reasoning, but intuitional; inevitable also, and ineradicable, as well as immediate,—that you are seeing and receiving, that you are discerning, handling, grasping, the things of God; things that are real indeed, even as no things can be more real, yea, none so real: "for the things that are seen are temporal, but the things that are unseen are eternal," (2 Cor. 4: 18.)

Chaucer's Counsel.

WRITTEN SHORTLY BEFORE HIS DEATH.

Flee from the crowd, and be to virtue true,
Content with what thou hast, though it be small;
To hoard brings hate—nor lofty things pursue;
He who climbs high endangers many a fall:
Envy's a shade that ever waits on fame,
And of the sun that rises it will bribe.
Trace not in life a vast expansive scheme,
But be thy wishes to thy state allied.
Be mild to others—to thyself severe—
So truth shall shield thee, or from hurt or fear.

Think not of bending all things to thy will,
Nor vainly hope that fortune shall befriend;
Inconstant she—but be thou constant still
Whate'er betide, unto an honest end.
Yet needless danger never madly brave,
Kick not thy naked foot against a nail;
Or from experience the solution crave,
If wall and pitcher strive which shall prevail;
Be in thy cause as in thy neighbor's clear,
So truth shall shield thee, or from hurt or fear.

Whatever happens, of a happy mind
Be thou; nor at thy lot in life repine;
He 'scapes all ill whose bosom is resigned,
Nor way nor weather shall be always fine.
Besides thy home's not here; a journey this—
A pilgrim thou; then hie thee on thy way,
Look up to God, intent to heavenly bliss,
Take what the road affords thee—praises pay;
Shun brutal lusts, and seek the soul's high sphere;
So truth shall shield thee, or from lust or fear.

A Sure Remedy for Bigotry.

Take one ounce of Intelligence, two ounces of Common Sense, three ounces of Modesty, four ounces of Charity. Mix well together, then boil slowly over the fire of "self-imperfection," till the whole shall attain the consistency of "impartial justice." When cool, take in considerable doses, every hour, till you shall begin to discover that there are others in the world who know something as well as yourself. This symptom will indicate convalescence, and you may begin to feel that your case is hopeful. Continue taking it, in somewhat smaller doses, till you shall recognize the right of every other person to think and speak, as well as you. It will now be safe for you to leave your place of confinement and go out into society.

HOME LIFE.—Even as the sunbeam is composed of millions of minute rays, the home light must be constituted of little tendernesses, kindly looks, sweet laughter, gentle words, loving counsels; it must not be like the torch blaze of natural excitement, which is easily quenched, but like the serene, chastened light, which burns as safely in the dry east wind as in the stillest atmosphere. Let each bear the other's burden the while—let each cultivate the mutual confidence, which is a gift capable of increase and improvement—and soon it will be found that kindliness will spring up on every side, displacing constitutional unsuitability, want of mutual knowledge, even as we have seen sweet violets and primroses dispelling the gloom of the grey sea-rock.—Ex.

My Mother's Grave.

I love to stray where my mother sleeps,
And gaze on each star as it twinkling peeps
Through that bending willow, as it lonely weeps
O'er my mother's grave.

I love to kneel on the green turf there,
Afar from the scenes of my daily care,
And breathe to my Maker my evening prayer
O'er my mother's grave.

I well remember how oft she led,
And knelt me beside her as with God she plead
That I might be his when the turf was spread
O'er my mother's grave.

I love to think how beneath the ground
She slumbers in death, like a captive bound,
She will slumber no more when the trump shall sound
O'er my mother's grave.

CONTENTMENT.—Happiness in part is imaginary, and its possession depends almost entirely upon ourselves; contentment is the key which unlocks the treasure house, and with "godliness is great gain."

The American Costume.

I was much pleased to see Sister Henry open in the paper a defence of the short dress. I have worn it since I came here, and think it preferable on very many accounts. My husband is thoroughly converted to it, and regards it as the best dress woman ever wore, judging from the point of taste, convenience and health. He urges me to henceforth wear no other, and says he will defend me in the American costume in city or country, civilly and ecclesiastically. What other husband says the same? If the men of the land could but see its superiority as related to the health of the other sex, they would not be long in recommending it. Thus a public opinion would be created in its favor which would originate from the right source, for the weaker sex are too timid to take the entire lead in such a reform movement.

It is worn in this Water Cure by all the female patients, as also by many in the town, and is prescribed by the medical faculty as a health measure, on the same principle as is the use of water and dietetics. And it is really surprising to see how agile the patients are when they don it, and how fast they improve in strength and health when afflicted with diseases peculiar to them. For ease on the person, for general neatness in appearance, for giving larger freedom to the limbs, for greater convenience in walking, in ascending eminences, in going up stairs, in getting out of or into wagons or cars, in crossing muddy roads, (and I will add, in walking beside a gentleman), the short dress has not only no equal, but is vastly superior, in its utility and style, to all others. I wish it might be universally adopted by our sex, though I fear it will not be, because those who wear it lack courage to face down silly prejudice, sneers, and unmanly and unwomanly opposition.

How long must woman be the slave of false custom and fashion, to the life-long injury of her health? There is one sister here, the wife of a clergyman, whose husband lost his charge, and could obtain no other, because she conscientiously wore it. What ignorant, wicked prejudices do even christians sometimes exhibit!

Dr. Harriet N. Austin, a very excellent, sensible woman, and a skillful physician, is the acknowledged originator of (not the "Bloomer," but) the American Costume—its proper and true name. Why should not christian females, as well as all others, go to Dansville, N. Y., to obtain fashions as well as to Paris? I may say more on this subject at a future time. All submitted for health's sake and for the glory of God.

Cause of Consumption.

Not by bad colds, nor hereditary predisposition, nor drinking liquor, nor tight lacing—for men do not lace, and yet as many of them die of consumption as women; few habitual drinkers die of that disease; and as for hereditary taint and bad colds, millions of the latter have gotten well of themselves, while the naturally feeble are compelled to an habitual carefulness of themselves, which gives them, in multitudes of cases, an immunity against all disease, except that of old age.

The very essence of consumption is a decline in flesh. Flesh is made of the food we eat; if that food does not give flesh, does not sustain the proper proportion of it, we begin to fade, and fail, and consume away.

But as there is not one in a hundred thousand who has not a plenty of food, and yet one out of every nine in the Union dies of consumption every year, the cause of that malady is not a want of food, although it is a want of flesh; and yet only food can give flesh. It must then be from one fact, that although we have a plenty of food, that food does not give the amount of flesh and strength which it ought to. The process by which food gives flesh is a double one—digestion and assimilation; in other words, it is the taking of the nourishment from the food, and distributing it to the body at various points.

The human body is much like a clock with its many wheels; if one goes slow the others go slow, and bad time is the result; if one little wheel of the body (one organ or one gland) works imperfectly or slowly, all the others are influenced thereby, and lag also. But what is the wheel which oftenest gets out of gear? It is the liver. But what infallible telegraphic signal is always made when the liver is out of order? It is constipation of the bowels. In a natural healthful state of the human body, the bowels act at least once a day; less than that is a certain indication that the liver is halting in its pace, and if the admonition is allowed to remain long unheeded, disease is as inevitable as the falling of a stone when cast from the hand. The moment constipation commences, that moment the blood begins to become impure and poor; loses its life and heat, and the body chills; "the least thing in the world" causes a chill to run along the back, or gives a cold outright; and a cold being so easily contracted, before one is cured another comes on, and that cold is continued, and this is the synonym of consumption! This article might therefore be closed with the important practical inference, that by avoiding or correcting constipation, very many of those diseases might be avoided or cured, which arise from impure blood. But another step may be taken with great advantage. What makes the liver grow slow in its action? what makes it torpid or work weakly?

For the same reason that an over-worked horse, or servant, or man, becomes slower and slower in every motion.

The liver has a certain amount of bile to manufacture every day; this bile is made out of the blood; if that blood be of a good quality every day, the work is regularly performed and well done, for the space of an hundred years! Any mechanic knows that it is a comparatively easy matter to make a good job out of good materials; but to turn out a good day's work from bad materials is a most tiresome, wearing, wasting thing. The blood becomes of a bad material within six hours after a man eats too much; if that excess is committed three times a day, this bad blood becomes a permanent supply in time; the liver for a while does its duty; longer, according to the greater vigor of the constitution; but sooner or later it lags; it is worked to death. In the meanwhile, constipation becomes a habit, and the work of death is done. But this curious fact is not unfrequent: when consumption is fastened on the lungs by continued colds, all the disease of the body is in a measure attracted there, the liver resumes its apparent healthy function, and the bowels remain daily acting, until death.

Over-eating, then, three times a day, may be considered as a primary, a radical cause of the great majority of consumptive diseases, and each reader is advised to take the matter in hand as to himself, by

1. Eating moderately every day.

2. By securing a daily action of the bowels.

But if he is so much of a baby—has so little self-denial and manly moral courage, that he "can't help eating too much," then an antagonizer of hearty eating is presented. Work steadily in the open air every day, from sunrise until sunset, with dry feet and dry clothing, singing, or whistling, all the time.—Journal of Health.

How to Clean Teeth.

There is, in my opinion no dentrifice used so baneful in its effects as charcoal. I doubt if there is a dentist, with a fair practice of ten years, but has seen worse effects from its use than from the use of acids. I have had in my own practice to insert three sets of teeth where the gums were destroyed, and the teeth dropped out from the use of charcoal. In two of these cases the gums were permanently discolored, so that there can be no mistake of its agency.

The effect of charcoal is purely mechanical; it is as sharp as diamond dust, and the finer the worse its effects. Being perfectly insoluble in the fluids of the mouth, it insinuates itself between the neck of the tooth and the gum, producing ulceration, recession, and final loss of the tooth itself. Next to charcoal, in their bad effects upon the teeth, are the various kinds of boles and earths, under different and sounding names, and popular as tooth powders.

I would have my patient use no kind of powders upon their teeth oftener than two or three times a month; then I would not have them use the brush, but take some finely prepared chalk, and a stick of red cedar, orange, or hickory, (we should say soft white pine,) about three inches long, wedge shape, and from one-eighth to one quarter inch wide; with this polish the enamel, being careful not to irritate the gums.

The great dentrifice that should be used at all times, and under any circumstances, is soap. Its alkaline properties serve to neutralize the acids contained in the fluids of the mouth, and its cleansing properties will correct the breath, and remove the offensive odor than any article I have ever seen tried. I have seen the best effects from its use in tenderness and inflammation of the gums denoting acrid secretion, and have never known it to fail in its results.

"Dyptheria."

This semi-throat disease has lately appeared among adults, though children are most commonly subjects of it. It is a strange and painful malady, arising from atmospheric conditions, and should be promptly treated as an electrical affection. Its symptoms are somewhat like croup and malignant scarlet fever, attended with occasional vomiting and purging, and concluding with the formation of a membrane or transparent film, which, covering the windpipe closely, brings on horrible sensations of choking and suffocation. Violent delirium is a very possible symptom, in a certain advanced stage of the affliction.

REMEDY: Treat the patient vigorously, as in a case of yellow fever. That is to say, bathe the arms and legs with warm water, containing as much mustard or red pepper as the skin will bear without blistering. Then manipulate downward rapidly until the surface is quite red and sensitive with the friction and irritation. Stop all food, and give only a teaspoonful of water at a time. Use frequent cold compresses upon the throat. Give from one to three warm water enemas each twenty-four hours. The wet sheet pack is good when the surface is dry and hot. In extreme cases, where suffocation seems unavoidable, apply fresh beef compresses to the throat. Rather than permit the disease to proceed, bathe the patient's extremities every two hours.—Herald of Progress.

End of Habitual Drinkers.

Dr. Hall's new book on Sleep states, in connection with the uneasy slumbers attendant on late dinners and hearty suppers, and the plea of "assisting digestion" with wine, brandies, or other beverages, that:

"No case is remembered, in the practice of a quarter of a century, where malt liquors, wines, brandies, or any alcholic drinks whatever, have ever had a permanent good effect in improving the digestion. Apparent advantages sometimes result, but they are transient or deceptive. If there is no appetite, it is because nature has provided no gastric juice; and that is the product of nature, not of alcohol. If there is appetite, but no digestive power, liquor no more supplies that power than would the lash give strength to an exhausted donkey. It torture does arouse the sinking beast, it is only that it shall fall a little later into a still greater exhaustion from which there is no recovery; so with the use of liquor and tobacco as whetters of the appetite, when, at length, the desire for the accustomed stimulus ceases, and the man "sickens;" there is no longer a relish for the dram and the chew, and life fades apace, either in a stupor from which there is no awaking, or by wasting and uncontrollable diarrhea.

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,

Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months	15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for three months for 50 cents, which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of brethren, they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Rules for Correspondents.

Over all matters not intended for publication, write PRIVATE.

Over all communications for the paper, write FOR THE CRISIS.

Over all business matters, write BUSINESS.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to ELD. MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass.

The postage on the Crisis, if prepaid, quarterly or yearly, at the office where it is received, will be 13 cents a year to any part of Massachusetts, and 26 cents to any other part of the United States.

☞ Canada Subscribers have to PRE-PAY the postage on their papers, [illegible] cents a year, in addition to the above; i. e. $1 will pay for twenty-three numbers, or [illegible] a year. The same to all the Provinces.

Beyond.

There 'll be no woes in heaven,
No dreary hour of pain and gloom,
No hearts by grief and anguish riven,
As here beside the tomb.

No tear shall ever moisten there
The eye lit up by love and joy,
No sorrow mark the brow with care,
That here our peace destroy.

No disappointments chill the breast,
No friends of folly prove;
No death to break that heavenly rest
Where dwells eternal love.

Oh! may that rest be mine
When life's dark scenes are o'er,
May I for aye a mansion find
On Canaan's happy shore.

That rest is all I ask;
That blissful hour I know will come,
When heaven its glories shall unmask,
And e'er like Eden bloom.

For the Crisis.

"Alas! Master, for it was borrowed."

The fact is astonishing, that a vast amount of all that appears lovely and noble is, "Alas! borrowed"; so many sail under false colors, that the honest are in danger of not appreciating men of real piety, unhappily becoming distrustful, which narrows and sours the mind. Consequently it is better to be deceived, than never to trust, for "counterfeits prove that virtue and purity really exist." For instance, one is captivated by the meek spirit and modest deportment of a christian. It is right that he should admire, even covet the inward adorning that makes him outwardly fair; but instead of tracing this beautiful, crystal stream to its source, he hews to himself a broken cistern that can hold no water, imitating the goodly gift, or affecting a spirit which he does not possess, which is often detected by the wise, and like all borrowed things, brings the wearer into disrepute, besides provoking the anger of a just God, who has said, "Buy of me gold tried in the fire," etc. Still there are some whited sepulchres that look tolerably well, and borrowed graces may be made to sit quite easily by habit, until the wearer may forget that it is merely the dress instead of the principle, which he has borrowed of the just; hence their danger as well as folly, for in security they may sleep until "the fire shall try every man's work."

But these are only small items of the mass that is borrowed. How often are we disgusted by borrowed sermons, and writings of every sort, even praying ("tell it not in Gath"!). Alas! little but surface work is found. Happy would it be for mortals, if, instead of grasping the shadow, they would secure the substance, covet the best gifts, instead of the showy, the jewel instead of the tinsel. Where are the "living epistles read and known of all men?" The borrowers take more pains not to be read, than it would take to be just what they would love to have men think them to be. And lastly, when deception will no longer avail, I fear there are many that will be compelled to confess that they have none of the spontaneous fruits of a good tree. That sermon, that gained for me the reputation of a godly man, an eloquent, soul-stirring preacher, was only a little scion borrowed from Henry Ward Beecher. The prayer that moved thousands, as the forest is moved by a mighty wind, was copied from Bishop H.

But not the preacher only is wearing false colors, lay members ape their superiors; they dare not take a position unless Bro A. adopts it, or Sr. B. approves; in short they "love greeting in the market places" as well as the old Pharisees; but, thank God, there are a few that dare to be honest men, that had rather sacrifice life than principle, that bribes cannot corrupt, neither can they be bought with honors; they cannot be made to sit when they ought to stand, nor keep silence when God bids them speak. They are frequently called stubborn; the martyrs were called obstinate; undoubtedly they thought Christ to be so, when he would not answer Pilate.

We certainly need men of will in these corrupting times, with minds that will not bend to serve an unholy cause, with purpose firm as the everlasting hills, to attack the strong holds of Satan, anywhere, even at the foot of the altar. There are champions that do not fear to attack "wickedness in high places." They are wise master-builders, and they do build, instead of pulling down. Follow them and you will find light in their track; where they stop, the cloud rests.

Again, they are not the complainers, they settle their bill with God, and do not disgrace their Master by slandering the household. If any profess to be his brother and is covetous, he tells him plainly into what harbor he will sail, and leaves it with his Father, as he should, and when the trial day comes, he will stand; with the righteous nation will enter in through the gates, and be justly crowned a king—an overcomer.

One Baptism.

The apostle Paul teaches there is one Lord, one faith, one baptism. Now it is certain that if the baptism of the Holy Spirit is the one baptism, then there is no such thing (or command) as water baptism. Did Jesus command believers of the gospel to be baptized with the Holy Spirit, or in water as he set them example, when he was baptized by John in Jordan?—Matt. 28 : 19, 20; Mark 16 : 15, 16. Did Paul baptize those disciples he found at Ephesus, into the Holy Spirit? or did they not receive the Holy Spirit after he had baptized them? Did not Philip baptize the Eunuch in water? And who instructed the Eunuch concerning water baptism, if Philip did not? And if Peter may have erred on the day of Pentecost, when he instructed those who inquired of him what they must do to be saved, to repent and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit, can the same charge be brought against Philip and Paul?

1. Baptism includes a burial and a rising up to "newness of life." "Buried with him in baptism, wherein ye are risen with him":—Col. 2 : 12; 3 : 1—4; Rom. 6 : 3—5; Acts 8 : 12, 35, 38.

2. Baptism is the "form" or type of gospel doctrine:—Rom. 6 : 17. The gospel, as preached by Paul in 1 Cor. 15 : 1–4, is that "Jesus died for our sins—was buried, and rose again" according to the Scriptures. Baptism gives it a formal expression.

3. Obedience to Jesus in this ordinance, honors the gospel. It makes our life, death, and resurrection a reality; those "buried" in the waters of "baptism," could never "walk in newness of life," if they were not "raised up" from the water, to that end. So also, "if the dead in Christ are not to be raised, then they are PERISHED." All depends on the resurrection.

4. No other act of obedience secures a distinct promise of a resurrection. "If we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection."—Rom. 6 : 5. That "likeness" of Christ's "death" and burial, that being "planted" in the likeness of his, (Christ's) "death" is stated in the preceding verse to be "buried with him in baptism."

We will give unquestionable testimony from the men of past ages. Rosenmuller says: "Immersion in the water of baptism, and coming forth out of it, was a symbol of a person's renouncing his former life, and, on the contrary, beginning a new one. The learned have rightly reminded us, that on account of this emblematical meaning of baptism, the rite of immersion ought to have been retained in the Christian Church."

Martin Luther, after speaking of baptism as a symbol of death and resurrection, says: "On this account I could wish that such as are to be baptized should be completely immersed into water, according to the meaning of the word; and the signification of the ordinance, as also, without doubt it was instituted by Christ."

Dr. Knapp, an eminent and pious German divine, says: "We are like Christ, buried as dead persons, by baptism, and should arise like him, to a new life."

Dr. Bloomfield, one of the most profound Biblical scholars of Great Britain, says: "We have been thus buried in the waters of baptism." He adds: "There is a plain allusion to the ancient custom of baptism by immersion."

Barnabas, the companion of Paul, says: "We descend into the water, and come out of it."

Justin Martyr: "Those who believe are led to some place where there is water, and then bathe in the water." In another place, he says: "We represent our Lord's sufferings and resurrection by baptism in a pool."

Tertullian: "We are immersed in water—let down into the water and dipped—Peter immersed in the Tiber."

Dionysius Areopag: "The total concealment in water fitly represents Christ's death and burial."

Chrysostom: "We, as in a sepulchre immersing our heads in water, the old man is buried and sinking down, the whole is concealed at once, then, as we immerge, the new man again rises."

Jerome: "Three times we are immersed."

Augustine: "Rightly are ye immersed three times, who have received baptism in the name of Christ."

Neander: "Baptism was originally by immersion."

Tholuck, on Rom. 6 : 4 says: "In order to understand the figurative use of baptism, we must bear in mind the well known fact, that the candidate in the primitive church was immersed in water, and raised out of it again."

Winer: "In the apostolic age, baptism was by immersion."

Bretschneider: "The apostolic church baptized only by immersion."

Schleusner, Wahl, and Btreschneider, the three great New Testament lexicographers of Germany, limit baptism, as a sacred ordinance, to immersion.

Wahn: "According to apostolic instruction and example, baptism was performed by immersing the whole body."

Prof. Lange: "Baptism in the apostolic age was a proper baptism; the immersion of the whole body in water. Plunging under water represents death, and the rising out of it, the resurrection to a new life."

In short, from the days of the apostles downwards for 1800 years, we have an unbroken chain of evidence, showing that baptism was performed by immersion, and by immersion only. Now, who would set at nought such testimony, if it were given on the subject of no immortality out of Christ? Is such testimony good for anything when it is in harmony with revelation, which shines as clear as the light of the noonday sun, on this most glorious subject, which represents in figure the death and resurrection of Christ our life giver? If any wish more testimony. and can procure the German book of Martyrs, they will there find, that the united testimony of the Church from the first ages of primitive christianity down through succeeding centuries, all sustain the testimony already given, that baptism by immersion in water is the "one baptism" spoken of by Paul. And with all christian kindness I would ask how believers are buried in baptism by or with the Spirit? And in being baptized with the Spirit, are they planted in the likeness of Christ's death? If Christ did not command baptism by immersion, when he commissioned his apostles to go and preach the gospel, and to observe all things whatsoever he commanded, what did he command? And why did his apostles teach and practice baptism by immersion if Christ did not set them the example when he went down into the Jordan and was baptized?

I am a firm believer in the comforting influences of the Holy Spirit, and unless we possess that spirit, we have no promise of having these mortal bodies made like unto Christ's glorified body; but I remain in strong doubt that the "one baptism" spoken of by Paul is the baptism of the Holy Spirit, and until stronger proof is given than I have yet seen I must believe as I do.

The Prayer Meeting.

I love the house of prayer,
Where Jesus deigns to bless
The ones who cast on Him their care,
And all their guilt confess.

I love the house of prayer,
Where saints together meet,
With Jesus' sacred presence there,
They hold communion sweet.

I love the house of prayer,
Where all with one accord,
In sweet submission to His will,
Bow down before their Lord.

I love the house of prayer,
I would be there alway;
I found the blessed Savior there—
'T was there I learned to pray.

Tower of the Flock.—Micah 4 : 8.

The tower of the flock, spoken of in this verse, is generally thought to mean Christ; but I think this is a mistake. In the 5th chap. of 2 Sam. 7th verse, it reads thus: "Nevertheless David took the stronghold of Zion, the same is the city of David." Now what is the tower of the flock? The Word says, "The stronghold of the daughter of Zion." What is "the stronghold of the daughter of Zion"? Ans.—"The city of David." That is all there is about it according to the Word. All can see that the "tower of the flock" is "the city of David." This city was in the hands of the Jebusites. It seems to have been a small city within Jerusalem, strongly walled in; but David's army broke into it and afterwards the same was called "the city of David." He had his throne in this city Here Christ will have his throne. Here will begin the first kingly rule of Christ. Here he takes possession; here he begins his reign over the Jews of Israel. For this end he was born to be king of the Jews. He does not say he was born to be king of the Gentiles. The Gentiles seem to be only adopted children; are not the olive tree, but grafted into it and share with the Jews in the same inheritance.

Selections.

The Spirit the Author of Reality in Religion.

To see this, let us consider in what the sense or feeling of reality consists;—the conviction and assurance of reality or realism, in any field or sphere, whether material or mental; whether in camp or council; in a word, in any pursuit or interest cognizable by man. Into what must we finally resolve our conviction of reality? To what must we ultimately trace up that impression or assurance?

Clearly—metaphysical speculation apart—to a certain correspondence between the object apprehended and the subject apprehending; a certain accordancy or mutual suitableness. Between the qualities of matter, for instance, and the senses of the human body by which we perceive these qualities, there is a certain correspondence or adaptation, by reason of which matter becomes to us, necessarily, in our apprehension, no shadowy, abstract, airy semblance, but an actual, existent, real thing. Between the phenomena of sound and the human ear there is a relation which inevitably begets the conviction that the sounds I hear are real; not ideal and imaginary, the echoes of dream-land. If they be musical sounds,—the performance on a many-stringed instrument of one that can handle it well,—they will be real to me only as sounds, and not as music, unless I have a mental sense or faculty, a musical ear or taste, corresponding to their quality as musical; as the literal ear is adapted to their more general character as sounds merely. Why is it that, to the merchant, prices, and markets, and rumors of markets come home with all the impression of intense reality? It is because there is a corresponding habit and character of mind in such a one. There is a relation and suitableness between the subject mind and the object presented to it; in virtue whereof the impression of reality springs up immediately when subject and object come together.

And it is so in every sphere of knowledge or of contemplation.

If therefore, the character and glory of God—his authoritative claim to your love—your exceeding sinfulness in refusing it; if the fact of your condemnation,—the substitution and righteousness of Christ,—his redeeming love and faithfulness; if faithfulness, if forgiveness of sin,—adoption,—the light of God's countenance,—the joy of his salvation and the comforts of his Spirit; if the beauty of holiness—the goodness of God's law—and the rewards of his favor: if these are to you as yet but shadows and ideas and unrealities, it is because between your spirit and these things of God's Spirit there is no suitableness, no living relation, no true answerableness or adaptation or correspondency.

But the Spirit of the Lord can give these things great reality in your estimation and conviction. For he can establish a glorious correspondency. Between these objective or outward "deep things of God," on the one hand; and your mind, as the active subject engaged in contemplating and dealing with them, on the other; the Spirit can create a living and blessed answerableness. He has these deep things of God in his keeping. They are his own,—"the things of the Spirit." He has your spirit in his keeping also, and at his full and sovereign disposal. He can frame it into the very image and character and glory of God. He can fashion it into the very figure and mould of God's holy law, and give unto it the leading attributes and tone of "the deep things of God."

And then,—when the character and glory of God are outwardly presented to your mind, itself now formed in that same glorious character;—when the authority of God is held up to you in imposing that same holy law which is now within your heart; and sin is held up to you as the transgression of that holy law; and Christ's atoning blood and surety-righteousness, as magnifying that holy law; and forgiveness, with acceptance, even complete justification, as following from that holy law having been magnified and made honorable; the sovereign love of God, also, as originating all this redemption, and the light of his countenance as following in his train; with the peace that passeth understanding, and the joy that is unspeakable and full of glory, and the hope that maketh not ashamed, and the rest that remaineth; oh! then, because of the exact correspondency between your inner man as formed anew of the Spirit, on the one hand, and these things of the self-same Spirit, on the other, there is in all your soul an impression;—not inferential, but direct; not the fruit of reasoning, but intuitional; inevitable also, and ineradicable, as well as immediate;—that you are seeing and receiving, that you are discerning, handling, grasping, the things of God; things that are real indeed, even as no things can be more real, yea, none so real: "for the things that are seen are temporal, but the things that are unseen are eternal," (2 Cor. 4 : 18.)

Chaucer's Counsel.

WRITTEN SHORTLY BEFORE HIS DEATH.

Flee from the crowd, and be to virtue true,
Content with what thou hast, though it be small;
To hoard brings hate—nor lofty things pursue;
He who climbs high endangers many a fall:
Envy's a shade that ever waits on fame,
And of the sun that rises it will bribe.
Trace not in life a vast expansive scheme,
But be thy wishes to thy state allied.
Be mild to others—to thyself severe—
So truth shall shield thee, or from hurt or fear.

Think not of bending all things to thy will,
Nor vainly hope that fortune shall befriend;
Inconstant she—but be thou constant still
Whate'er betide, unto an honest end.
Yet needless danger never madly brave,
Kick not thy naked foot against a nail;
Or from experience the solution crave,
If well and pitcher strive which shall prevail;
Be in thy cause as in thy neighbor's clear,
So truth shall shield thee, or from hurt or fear.

Whatever happens, of a happy mind
Be thou; nor at thy lot in life repine;
He 'scapes all ill whose bosom is resigned,
Nor way nor weather shall be always fine.
Besides thy home's not here; a journey this—
A pilgrim thou; then hie thee on thy way,
Look up to God, intent to heavenly bliss;
Take what the road affords thee—praises pay;
Shun brutal lusts, and seek the soul's high sphere;
So truth shall shield thee, or from lust or fear.

A Sure Remedy for Bigotry.

Take one ounce of Intelligence, two ounces of Common Sense, three ounces of Modesty, four ounces of Charity. Mix well together, then boil slowly over the fire of "self-imperfection," till the whole shall attain the consistency of "impartial justice." When cool, take in considerable doses, every hour, till you shall begin to discover that there are others in the world who know something as well as yourself. This symptom will indicate convalescence, and you may begin to feel that your case is hopeful. Continue taking it, in somewhat smaller doses, till you shall recognize the right of every other person to think and speak, as well as you. It will now be safe for you to leave your place of confinement and go out into society.

HOME LIFE.—Even as the sunbeam is composed of millions of minute rays, the home light must be constituted of little tendernesses, kindly looks, sweet laughter, gentle words, loving counsels; it must not be like the torch blaze of natural excitement, which is easily quenched, but like the serene, chastened light, which burns as safely in the dry east wind as in the stillest atmosphere. Let each bear the other's burden the while—let each cultivate the mutual confidence, which is a gift capable of increase and improvement—and soon it will be found that kindliness will spring up on every side, displacing constitutional unsuitability, want of mutual knowledge, even as we have seen sweet violets and primroses dispelling the gloom of the grey sea-rock.—Ex.

My Mother's Grave.

I love to stray where my mother sleeps,
And gaze on each star as it twinkling peeps
Through that bending willow, as it lonely weeps
O'er my mother's grave.

I love to kneel on the green turf there,
Afar from the scenes of my daily care,
And breathe to my Maker my evening prayer
O'er my mother's grave.

I well remember how oft she led,
And knelt me beside her as with God she plead
That I might be his when the turf was spread
O'er my mother's grave.

I love to think how beneath the ground
She slumbers in death, like a captive bound,
She will slumber no more when the trump shall sound
O'er my mother's grave.

CONTENTMENT.—Happiness in part is imaginary, and its possession depends almost entirely upon ourselves; contentment is the key which unlocks the treasure house, and with "godliness is great gain."

The American Costume.

I was much pleased to see Sister Henry open in the paper a defence of the short dress. I have worn it since I came here, and think it preferable on very many accounts. My husband is thoroughly converted to it, and regards it as the best dress woman ever wore, judging from the point of taste, convenience and health. He urges me to henceforth wear no other, and says he will defend me in the American costume in city or country, civilly and ecclesiastically. What other husband says the same? If the men of the land could but see its superiority as related to the health of the other sex, they would not be long in recommending it. Thus a public opinion would be created in its favor which would originate from the right source, for the weaker sex are too timid to take the entire lead in such a reform movement.

It is worn in this Water Cure by all the female patients, as also by many in the town, and is prescribed by the medical faculty as a health measure, on the same principle as is the use of water and dietetics. And it is really surprising to see how agile the patients are when they don it, and how fast they improve in strength and health when afflicted with diseases peculiar to them. For ease on the person, for general neatness in appearance, for giving larger freedom to the limbs, for greater convenience in walking, in ascending eminences, in going up stairs, in getting out of or into wagons or cars, in crossing muddy roads, (and I will add, in walking beside a gentleman), the short dress has not only no equal, but is vastly superior, in its utility and style, to all others. I wish it might be universally adopted by our sex, though I fear it will not be, because those who wear it lack courage to face down silly prejudice, sneers, and unmanly and unwomanly opposition.

How long must woman be the slave of false custom and fashion, to the life-long injury of her health? There is one sister here, the wife of a clergyman, whose husband lost his charge, and could obtain no other, because she conscientiously wore it. What ignorant, wicked prejudices do even christians sometimes exhibit!

Dr. Harriet N. Austin, a very excellent, sensible woman, and a skillful physician, is the acknowledged originator of (not the "Bloomer," but) the American Costume—its proper and true name. Why should not christian females, as well as all others, go to Dansville, N. Y., to obtain fashions as well as to Paris? I may say more on this subject at a future time. All submitted for health's sake and for the glory of God.

"Our Home" Water Cure,
Dansville, N. Y.

Cause of Consumption.

Not by bad colds, nor hereditary predisposition, nor drinking liquor, nor tight lacing—for men do not lace, and yet as many of them die of consumption as women; few habitual drinkers die of that disease; and as for hereditary taint and bad colds, millions of the latter have gotten well of themselves, while the naturally feeble are compelled to an habitual carefulness of themselves, which gives them, in multitudes of cases, an immunity against all disease, except that of old age.

The very essence of consumption is a decline in flesh. Flesh is made of the food we eat; if that food does not give flesh, does not sustain the proper proportion of it, we begin to fade, and fail, and consume away.

But as there is not one in a hundred thousand who has not a plenty of food, and yet one out of every nine in the Union dies of consumption every year, the cause of that malady is not a want of food, although it is a want of flesh; and yet only food can give flesh. It must then be from one fact, that although we have a plenty of food, that food does not give the amount of flesh and strength which it ought to. The process by which food gives flesh is a double one—digestion and assimilation; in other words, it is the taking of the nourishment from the food, and distributing it to the body at various points.

The human body is much like a clock with its many wheels; if one goes slow the others go slow, and bad time is the result; if one little wheel of the body (one organ or one gland) works imperfectly or slowly, all the others are influenced thereby, and lag also. But what is the wheel which oftenest gets out of gear? It is the liver. But what infallible telegraphic signal is always made when the liver is out of order? It is constipation of the bowels. In a natural healthful state of the human body, the bowels act at least once a day; less than that is a certain indication that the liver is halting in its pace, and if the admonition is allowed to remain long unheeded, disease is as inevitable as the falling of a stone when cast from the hand. The moment constipation commences, that moment the blood begins to become impure and poor; loses its life and heat, and the body chills; "the least thing in the world" causes a chill to run along the back, or gives a cold outright; and a cold being so easily contracted, before one is cured another comes on, and that cold is continued, and this is the synonym of consumption! This article might therefore be closed with the important practical inference, that by avoiding or correcting constipation, very many of those diseases might be avoided or cured, which arise from impure blood. But another step may be taken with great advantage, What makes the liver grow slow in its action? what makes it torpid or work weakly?

For the same reason that an over-worked horse, or servant, or man, becomes slower and slower in every motion.

The liver has a certain amount of bile to manufacture every day; this bile is made out of the blood; if that blood be of a good quality every day, the work is regularly performed and well done, for the space of an hundred years! Any mechanic knows that it is a comparatively easy matter to make a good job out of good materials; but to turn out a good day's work from bad materials is a most tiresome, wearing, wasting thing. The blood becomes of a bad material within six hours after a man eats too much; if that excess is committed three times a day, this bad blood becomes a permanent supply in time; the liver for a while does its duty; longer, according to the greater vigor of the constitution; but sooner or later it lags; it is worked to death. In the meanwhile, constipation becomes a habit, and the work of death is done. But this curious fact is not unfrequent: when consumption is fastened on the lungs by continued colds, all the disease of the body is in a measure attracted there, the liver resumes its apparent healthy function, and the bowels remain daily acting, until death.

Over-eating, then, three times a day, may be considered as a primary, a radical cause of the great majority of consumptive diseases, and each reader is advised to take the matter in hand as to himself, by

1. Eating moderately every day.
2. By securing a daily action of the bowels.

But if he is so much of a "baby"—has so little self-denial and manly moral courage, that he "can't help eating too much!" then an antagonizer of hearty eating is presented. Work steadily in the open air every day, from sunrise until sunset, with dry feet and dry clothing, singing, or whistling, all the time.—Journal of Health.

How to Clean Teeth.

There is, in my opinion no dentrifice used so baneful in its effects as charcoal. I doubt if there is a dentist, with a fair practice of ten years, but has seen worse effects from its use than from the use of acids. I have had in my own practice to insert three sets of teeth where the gums were destroyed, and the teeth dropped out from the use of charcoal. In two of these cases the gums were permanently discolored, so that there can be no mistake of its agency.

The effect of charcoal is purely mechanical; it is as sharp as diamond dust, and the finer the worse its effects. Being perfectly insoluble in the fluids of the mouth, it insinuates itself between the neck of the tooth and the gum, producing ulceration, recession, and final loss of the tooth itself. Next to charcoal, in their bad effects upon the teeth, are the various kinds of boles and earths, under different and sounding names, and popular as tooth powders.

I would have my patient use no kind of powders upon their teeth oftener than two or three times a month; then I would not have them use the brush, but take some finely prepared chalk, and a stick of red cedar, orange, or hickory, (we should say soft white pine,) about three inches long, wedge shape, and from one-eighth to one quarter inch wide; with this polish the enamel, being careful not to irritate the gums.

The great dentrifice that should be used at all times, and under any circumstances, is soap. Its alkaline properties serve to neutralize the acids contained in the fluids of the mouth, and its cleansing properties will correct the breath, and remove the offensive odor than any article I have ever seen tried. I have seen the best effects from its use in tenderness and inflammation of the gums denoting acrid secretion, and have never known it to fail in its results.

"Dyptheria."

This semi-throat disease has lately appeared among adults, though children are most commonly subjects of it. It is a strange and painful malady, arising from atmospheric conditions, and should be promptly treated as an electrical affection. Its symptoms are somewhat like croup and malignant scarlet fever, attended with occasional vomiting and purging, and concluding with the formation of a membrane or transparent film, which, covering the windpipe closely, brings on horrible sensations of choking and suffocation. Violent delirium is a very possible symptom, in a certain advanced stage of the affliction.

REMEDY: Treat the patient vigorously, as in a case of yellow fever. That is to say, bathe the arms and legs with warm water, containing as much mustard or red pepper as the skin will bear without blistering. Then manipulate downward rapidly until the surface is quite red and sensitive with the friction and irritation. Stop all food, and give only a teaspoonful of water at a time. Use frequent cold compresses upon the throat. Give from one to three warm water enemas each twenty-four hours. The wet sheet pack is good when the surface is dry and hot. In extreme cases, where suffocation seems unavoidable, apply fresh beef compresses to the throat. Rather than permit the disease to proceed, bathe the patient's extremities every two hours.—Herald of Progress.

End of Habitual Drinkers.

Dr. Hall's new book on Sleep states, in connection with the uneasy slumbers attendant on late dinners and hearty suppers, and the plea of "assisting digestion" with wine, brandies, or other beverages, that:

"No case is remembered, in the practice of a quarter of a century, where malt liquors, wines, brandies, or any alcholic drinks whatever, have ever had a permanent good effect in improving the digestion. Apparent advantages sometimes result, but they are transient or deceptive. If there is no appetite, it is because nature has provided no gastric juice; and that is the product of nature, not of alcohol. If there is appetite, but no digestive power, liquor no more supplies that power than would the lash give strength to an exhausted donkey. It torture does arouse the sinking beast, it is only that it shall fall a little later into a still greater exhaustion from which there is no recovery; so with the use of liquor and tobacco as whetters of the appetite, when, at length, the desire for the accustomed stimulus ceases, and the man "sickens;" there is no longer a relish for the dram and the chew, and life fades apace, either in a stupor from which there is no awaking, or by wasting and uncontrollable diarrhea.

Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for three months for 50 cents, which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of brethren, they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Rules for Correspondents.

Over all matters not intended for publication, write PRIVATE.

Over all communications for the paper, write FOR THE CRISIS.

Over all business matters, write BUSINESS.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to Eld. MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass.

The postage on the Crisis, if prepaid quarterly or yearly, at the office where it is received, will be 13 cents a year to any part of Massachusetts, and 26 cents to any other part of the United States.

☞ Canada Subscribers have to PRE-PAY the postage on their papers, 26 cents a year, in addition to the above; i. e., $1 will pay for twenty-three numbers, or $2.26 a year. The same to all the Provinces.

My Harp.

Once more, my harp, I'll touch thy chords,
Long hast thou been unstrung,
And down by Babel's dark cold stream,
On lonely willows hung.

A foreign land—a captive's lot—
Sadness and silence brings;
Oh! let it be a joyful strain,
That wakes thy slumbering strings!

No more would I in bondage toil,
With hope and birthright gone,
Or sit and weep in silence near
Thy streams, oh Babylon!

No more with torn and bleeding feet
I'd tread this wilderness,
A partner in the woes of saints—
A stranger to their peace.

No more I'd fill my soul with husks
From which the swine are fed;
When in "my Father's house" at home,
The servants feast on bread.

"I will arise" and seek his face,
Of all my wanderings speak,
We meet—his arms are round my neck—
His kiss is on my cheek!

And lo! within his sacred halls
Tokens of joy upspring!
The "fatted calf," the festive song,—
The "robe," the "shoes," the "ring!"

Oh! give me then "my pilgrim harp,"
I'll sweep its trembling strings;
"The dead's alive! the lost is found!"
And she who mourned now sings!

Something New.

Those who persist in advocating the doctrine of man's inherent immortality sometimes find themselves in peculiarly difficult positions; and the ingenuity with which they endeavor to dodge the thrust direct, or spiritualize a straight forward question is wonderful. With them death does not mean death, but an entrance into a more exalted or miserable state of existence; and eternal life is not the gift of God, but an inalienable principle as lasting and indestructible as the throne of the Omnipotent. The utter destruction of the wicked, their "being as though they had not been," is but a figure of speech to represent an endless suffering in the flaming pit:—living in the most excruciating sensitiveness to pain, which means the second death! The coming of Christ, they say, is a spiritual visitation to man at his departure from this life, and that his future abode is above the starry heavens, and not upon the earth, as an unsophisticated reader would infer from reading the Scriptures, which say, that this world shall be inherited by the meek. All this we hear every day; but the newest idea out is one which a gentleman, whose veracity I have no reason to question, told me of a few days ago, which I shall relate as nearly as I can without any unnecessary adornment in language or sentiment.

The gentleman above alluded to, said that he had an Irishman in his employment, a shrewd, trustworthy fellow, whose wife had recently been confined. The little stranger was a sickly, puny thing, and no time was lost in sending for a priest to christen it, lest it would die without the saving operation, and of course run a great chance of warmer accommodation than was to be thought of or desired. But the poor child did die before his Reverence came, and there was no help for it. Now the father of the child had a "lot" in one of the Catholic cemeteries, regularly consecrated, and the poor man thought if the baby were buried there its case was not entirely hopeless. But the priest absolutely refused it burial—he would not suffer the miserable little carcass to pollute the holy ground! The trembling father then put the following momentous question:

"Arrah, then, your Riverence, what will become of its unfortunate sowl?"

"Soul!" cried the priest, "It has got no soul."

"No sowl?" exclaimed the astonished parent, gazing at his spiritual adviser in blank dismay.

"Not a bit of one," replied his reverence firmly. "The child was dead before I could put the blessed cross upon it and the soul begins when the priest puts the holy sign upon its forehead!! Therefore it has no soul!" The priest turned away and left his enlightened disciple who muttered something like, "If it hasn't got no sowl it's hardly worth the berrin' at all at all."

We should like to know when this new light sprang up in the doctrines of the Infallible Church? If it came from head quarters, and from the unerring wisdom of the Vicegerent, it robs the church of one of its most comforting doctrines, videlicet, "that the souls of all heretics are doomed to everlasting suffering in the very hottest corner in hell." The no-soul doctrine of unbaptized infants is but a poor equivalent for the exquisite enjoyment of a heretic burning, the first instalment of said punishment in this world if possible, and the balance in the next Perhaps the chief of the fire department below, has notified his faithful co-worker that his establishment is too full already, and as he cannot make room for others without reducing his present charge to ashes, which seems impossible, he therefore requests no more souls made whose destiny is anything lower than purgatory!

But a truce to further irony. Is it not dreadful to contemplate the brazen audacity and bold blasphemy of these unscrupulous manufacturers of doctrines, which blind men's minds, and keep them in deepest ignorance of their future fate! The veriest idolater that ever trembled before the fierce priest of a demon idol, never was more priest ridden and blindly led than the votaries of this insolent, truculent abomination, whose bare existence depends upon unthinking ignorance, even as the hideous vampire and the bloated spider dwell and fatten in the dark unctiousness of a noisome dungeon, or the cob-webbed desolation of a ruined castle.

But the light of revelation and the steps of progress are fast doing away with the mummery of priestcraft. The rusty chains of spiritual despotism are being snapped from the galled limbs of a nation which has determined to be free; and the lamp of the Everlasting Gospel now throws its radiance into the mouldering and ghastly superstition, revealing its decrepid deformity, while the exulting shout of liberated millions sounds the knell of the oppressor, whose head is now uncovered to the exterminating stroke of the avenger of the blood of his saints. Not all the policy and power of the monarchy of this globe could avert the harlot's doom a single day—

When heaven's dire plagues are poured upon her guilt—
The answered prayer of those whose blood she spilt.
The curse invoking cry—"O Lord, how long?"
Come loud and deeper from the slaughtered throng.
The clouds of vengeance roll along the sky,
Red with the bolt which seals her destiny.
The bloody cup still trembles in her grasp—
She reels and totters ere she drinks her last.
And those who shared in her abomination
Shall share her plagues, says holy revelation.
And like the millstone cast into the flood,
So shall they perish in the sea of blood.
While she, enwrapped by the devouring flame,
Shall perish quite, nor leave behind a name.

"Holy Men"—their Testimony.

It sometimes happens, when we refer to the Old Testament Scriptures for proof of some very important doctrines which we believe and teach; that we are told that our authors "lived in a comparatively dark period, in a dim, a shadowy dispensation." Be it so, yet the New Testament teaches, that they were "holy men of God," and also that they "spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." That "whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning," hence we may expect to learn the truth from them, but never from the Babel of modern theology. One of the moderns, a pious man and an excellent poet, has taught us to sing:

"And when my voice is lost in death,
Praise shall employ my nobler powers."

Job's contemplation of the 'death sleep' was somewhat different (3:13); "For now (if he had died,) should I have lain still and been quiet, I should have slept: then had I been at rest." Hear David, Israel's poet, (Ps. 6:5,)—"In death there is no remembrance of thee; in the grave who shall give thee thanks"? Watts would answer by saying, "all the dead saints shall 'employ their nobler powers' in this work. But David interrogated again, (Ps. 88:10, 11), "Wilt thou shew wonders to the dead? Shall the dead arise and praise thee?" Let David answer his own queries. Ps. 146:4.—Of the death of man he says, "His breath goeth forth, HE returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish." See also Eccl. 9:5, 6, 10.—Hezekiah, the God-fearing king, was right when he said, (Isa. 38:18), "For the grave cannot praise thee, death cannot celebrate thee." Some start back from this view of the intermediate state, with "Oh! how dreadful!! to be for ages unconscious." "Can't believe that my daughter that died so happy is unconscious." Most of this class of persons talk as though with this view the dead would be conscious of being unconscious. This is a slight mistake.

Let me here introduce the graphic language of Dr. Spring, found at the close of one of his sermons, upon the flight of time. He says,—"I shall never address this audience again. I shall never again meet them but at the bar of God. That interview seems indeed far distant. But it will be as soon as time, with his eagle wings, shall have finished the little remnant of his short career. 'After death the judgment.' We die; but intervening ages pass rapidly over those who sleep in the dust. There is no plate there on which to count the hours of time. No longer is it told by days, or months, or years; for the planets which mark these periods are hidden from their sight. Its flight is no longer noticed by the events perceived by the senses, for the ear is deaf and the eye is closed. The busy world of life, which wakes at each morning and ceases every night, goes on above them, but to them all is silent and unseen. The greetings of joy and the voice of grief, the revolution of empires and the lapse of ages, send no sound within that narrow cell. Generation after generation are brought and laid by their side; the inscription upon their monumental marble tells the centuries that have passed away; but to the sleeping dead, the long interval is unobserved. Like a dream of the night, with the quickness of thought, the mind ranges time and space almost without a limit. There is but a moment, between the hour when the eye is closed in the grave and when it wakes to the judgment." How beautiful, no 'loneliness in heaven' because many dear ones are left behind to toil and suffer, nay;—but when the first saint who has died, (whether Abel or another,) sets foot on the land of promise, Lo! all are there. "These all, having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise; God having provided (Marg. foreseen,) some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect."—Heb. 11:39, 40.

Is it Death?

As I think over the scenes of the past, present and future, I fully realize that death is in the land, from the beginning to the end, it is one continued state of death. The past has been a scene of death, burial places filled up, and the present forgotten. Because bloodshed is here, death is here, sorrow and sighing. Tears fill the eyes of the aged and the youth as they gaze over the coffined form of a loved one. On one side is a lovely babe, just entwined in the parents' affections. Death has closed its eyes never more to look again on its mother. Again I see a youth of fair promises of health; disease and death mark him for their victim. A maiden is taken, and a lover is left to mourn. A brother, or sister, or father is taken, and others left to mourn.

Oh death! thou art a cruel monster, setting thy seal on all that is lovely; but soon thy power will be destroyed; soon thou too wilt die. Oh death! thou hast taken from me a mother; thou didst make her suffer; thou hast robbed a father of seventy years and more of a companion. Cruel death! I never felt thy power so much before. When I have seen the funeral procession pass along, and heard the tolling bell, I hardly thought that death had done this. As I stood over my mother's bed and smoothed her aching head, and gave her water to quench her thirst, and knew that she must die, then I felt sympathy for all who are called to mourn. But mother is gone. The cold grave is her house. There she lies waiting for Gabriel's trumpet to sound, and then I shall see her again. Oft has instruction passed her lips—oft has she gazed on grandchildren, wept over them, and told them their days of happiness would soon be over. And as we watched her, and saw an inflammatory disease making rapid progress on her frame, beholding it change with lightning speed to the brain, then all the human heart was revealed to me. I have seen all this in all society, in most all neighborhoods; been in all kinds of sickness, and seen some of all ages die, from the babe of six months to old age, yet never felt sympathy for them as I ought to until now. Oh heart! how treacherous.

The babe of Bethlehem! Once he wept over Judah's city. He died on Calvary's mountain. He died for you and me; for you, sinner, he died; but he lives again no more to die. He died because sin was in the world, sin in the inhabitants of earth. But hark! I hear a voice of lamentation and bitter weeping, the weeping and groaning creation;—Rachel weeping for her children. A host of martyrs I hear crying, and the living echo the sound—"How long, oh, Lord?" How long ere we shall see Jesus coming, the best friend, he who knows our sorrows, and can heal all our sickness? He died on the mountain; he sweat as it were great drops of blood; his blood atoned for me. Oh! may I accept his grace and be saved.

Sinner, his blood was shed for you; turn it not away. Heed his voice. To-day mercy is for you. Lend your ear and hear the voice of mercy; turn not away; Jesus died and lives again. He is coming (hasten the day!) to save his children. Sinner, will he call for and save you? Death is in the land; sickness and sorrow, trials and afflictions; meeting and parting; praying and sighing; but all a shadow that will soon pass away. Jesus is coming; death will then die; for it is written: "I will destroy death and him that hath the power of death, which is the devil." I shall be glad and weep no more when the devil is destroyed, for he has made sorrow and trouble enough. Then mother will come forth. All, mothers, fathers, brothers, sisters, friends, will come forth, some to immortal beauty and glory, some to eternal death. May the Lord grant, reader, that you and I may be made to bloom in immortal beauty, and sing the song of triumph. There will be no more death.

Infant Salvation.

As a good many think and say the Scriptures are almost silent on that subject, I wish to say a little for the consolation of those whose children are in the enemy's land. "Thus saith the Lord, even the captives of the mighty shall be taken away, and the prey of the terrible shall be delivered: for I will contend with him that contendeth with thee, and I will save thy children."—Isa. 49:25. "Thus saith the Lord, refrain thy voice from weeping, and thine eyes from tears: for thy work shall be rewarded, saith the Lord; and they (thy children) shall come again from the land of the enemy. And there is hope in thine end, saith the Lord, that thy children shall come again to their own border."—Jer. 31:16, 17. When they brought infants to Jesus, the disciples rebuked them; but Jesus called them unto him and said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of God." I know all are the children of wrath by nature, but God is rich in mercy (Eph. 2:3) to them that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression.—Rom. 5:14. They shall be in the kingdom, and kings shall be nursing fathers, and their queens their nursing mothers. They (the saints) shall be kings and priests for a thousand years (Rev. 1:6 and 20:6). "And they shall build the old wastes, they shall rear up the former desolations, and they shall repair the waste cities, the desolations of many generations. And strangers shall stand and feed your flocks, and the sons of the alien shall be your plowmen and your vinedressers. But ye shall be named the priests of the Lord: men shall call you the ministers of our God."—Isa. 61:4 to end of the chapter. "The sons also of them that afflicted thee shall come bending unto thee; and all they that despised thee shall bow themselves down at the soles of thy feet; and they shall call thee, the city of the Lord, the Zion of the Holy One of Israel. For brass I will bring gold, and for iron, I will bring silver, and for wood brass, and for stones iron. I will also make thy officers peace, and thine exactors righteousness. Violence shall be no more in thy land, wasting nor destruction within thy borders; thou shalt call thy walls salvation, and thy gates praise. The sun shall be no more thy light by day; neither for brightness shall the moon give light unto thee: but the Lord shall be unto thee an exceeding light, and thy God thy glory. Thy sun shall no more go down; neither shall thy moon withdraw itself; for the Lord shall be thine everlasting light, and the days of thy mourning shall be ended. A little one shall become a thousand, and a small one a strong nation: I the Lord will hasten it in his time. Isa. 60:14 to the end. "And righteousness shall be the girdle of his loins, and faithfulness the girdle of his reins. The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them. And the cow and the bear shall feed; their young ones shall lie together and the lion shall eat straw like the ox, and the sucking child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand on the cockatrice' den. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain; for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea."—Isa. 11th and 12th chaps. "Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous branch, and a King shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth. In his days Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely: and this is his name whereby he shall be called, the Lord our Righteousness."—Jer. 23:5. "He shall judge the poor of the people, he shall save the children of the needy and shall break in pieces the oppresser."—Ps. 72:4.

God is a just God; he willeth not the death of any, he is no respecter of persons' all the sons and daughters of Adam have or will have an offer of life eternal, by believing and obeying the second Adam; but as in Adam all die, so in Christ will all be made alive, but every man (or class of men) in his own order. The Son of man did not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them. For the Son of man came to seek and to save that which was lost.—Luke 19:10. All the seed of Adam was lost without a Savior. Jesus is the Savior of all that believe and obey him. Therefore little children will come again from the land of the enemy, and be in the kingdom of Jesus. And in the regeneration when the Son of man shall sit on the throne of his glory, (and he shall be a priest on his throne) his disciples shall sit on twelve thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel.—Matt. 19:28; Zech. 6. 13. And moreover, when Christ sits on the throne of his kingdom, his saints will be rulers or governors over the cities of the world, some over ten, some five, some two, according to their several abilities (Matt. 19:17), and improvement of their talents here. "For thus saith the Lord, that created the heavens; God himself that formed the earth and made it; he hath established it, he created it not in vain, he formed it to be inhabited."—Isa. 45:18. "Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment from henceforth even forever. The zeal of the Lord of Hosts will perform this."—Isa. 9:7. The kingdom will increase, and multiply, as the stars of the heaven, and "as the sand which is upon the sea shore, innumerable."—Gen. 22:17. "Thus saith the Lord; if ye can break my covenant of the day, and my covenant of the night, and that there should not be day and night in their season; then may also my covenant be broken with David my servant, that he should not have a son to reign upon his throne; and with the Levites the priests, my ministers. As the host of heaven cannot be numbered, neither the sand of the sea measured: so will I multiply the seed of David my servant, and the Levites that minister unto me."—Jer. 33:20—23. The kingdom of Jesus will increase, till it fill the whole earth.—Dan 2:35. "And every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I saying, Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb forever and ever."—Rev. 5:13. "For the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea." Amen and amen.

"Behold the Day cometh that shall burn as an Oven!"

Were it not a fact, that life is brief, that death may suddenly unclothe us of mortal life, it is fearful (without a good foundation,) to realize, that we are standing on this world's meager sea, whose very waters are kissing the shores of eternity, and the next wave may bring us to the shore, where our life voyage in time will be ended. Our long day's work will then be done, not as individuals only, but a whole world's work completed. As a world, and as individuals, no repairs in the past can then be made. Our vessel will never reverse its course, or traverse its long path again; only one voyage is vouchsafed to man, only one for the world; if this prove a failure, it is an eternal failure. The morning of the world is gone, its noon,—its sun has been sinking lower and lower, until but a speck of its disk is visible.

The song-bird gathers its wings, and bids farewell to her home work; its little nest in the bough is left far behind, while she seeks some sunny spot; but it is only till the cold winds pass away, and the snow melts from the green sod in its native bowers, then she returns to work and sing, as before. But when man lays down his work, he may never resume it again. There is no retrograde hour in his probation. If he darkens one bright spot for his fellow, he may not stay to repair it. If he justles one car from the rail, it drags a whole train with it; but on, on he whirls, leaving in his track weeping and desolation. As circle after circle is formed in the water, by dropping a pebble into its clear fount; so one sin may gather in its train a multitude, an army of effects, that will be felt long after the transgressor has stepped from the stage. Sinner, beware! Backslider, pause! lest not only thorns be planted in an earthly pillow, but the blood of the ungodly be at last found in thy skirts.

Ungodly deeds and words, like spectres, haunt the midnight hour and the couch of death, but will speak in a voice of thunder when man stands before his Judge. And thou, hoary-headed world, although so old in guilt, so august in numbers, think not to escape the vengeance of a long-suffering God; thy crimes have reached unto heaven; the very soil is polluted with blood, the air is burdened with the sighing of the prisoners, the clank of the chain has entered the ears of the God of Sabaoth; the tears and groans of past ages are not forgotten; dissembling and lying, treachery and pride, have filled thy cup, and thou must fall.

The earth once destroyed by water is reserved unto fire and the perdition of the ungodly, but a little reprieve is granted. Thy fate lingers; a beam of mercy falls across thy pathway, but the gleaning after the harvest is almost ended; the precious are being taken from the vile, the day of his preparation is almost over. Many have been buying the eye-salve, and, thank God, are no longer blind. There are a few that are keeping the word of his patience, holding fast their crown. Some are rich with the gold tried in the fire, and have bought the white raiment. In short, the bride is almost ready. Then the kingdom must be given to the Mighty Conqueror and his chosen. Awake! doomed world, from thy slumbers, prepare to meet thy God! for behold he cometh with vengeance and a recompense.

VESTA N. CUDWORTH.

Life Insurance.

Man naturally loves security and dreads uncertainty. Give him something that is permanent and he reposes in the enjoyment of it. But where all is uncertain all is unrest.

Among the things that are uncertain on earth, nothing is more so than human life. No other possession is held by a tenure more frail. No thread is more brittle than that which holds us to these mortal scenes. From childhood to old age, ten thousand dangers lurk along our path. Ten thousand flickering life-lamps expire before the first blast of earth's chill tempest; others burn but feebly, and at last go out in darkness; and often the life that seemed to glow with a steady and a quenchless flame, is blotted out in an instant by some untoward event. So man dies—"his breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish." Ps. 146:4. His purposes are broken off and unfulfilled—his wealth is snatched from him—the sceptre drops from his hand—the crown from his brow, and he falls like a potsherd smitten by an iron rod; or fades like a flower before a burning blast. "In the morning it flourisheth and groweth up; in the evening it is cut down and withereth." Ps. 90:6.

Life, though so frail, is yet of immense value. Because upon it hangs all enjoyment, prosperity, friendship, wealth, and all the support and dependence of others who look to us for assistance. Cut off life, and happiness fades from the home; joy flees from the hearts of friends; bread for the hungry fails, and the goodly building of human comfort falls in ruins upon the pillars that have been broken beneath it.

Men in the absence of any desired good naturally seek a substitute for it. So if they cannot retain life, they contrive by an associate or corporate action to secure to their friends, or those left behind them, some of those blessings which they would have secured had they been permitted to live to carry out the plans they had formed. So that, by paying annually a certain limited amount, the person is thus insured, and in case he shall die, his heirs or legal representatives are entitled to a large amount of money on account of the insurance thus effected by him.

Reader, I wish to call your attention to a system of "Life Insurance," older, better, and more reliable and satisfactory, in every respect, than any system which is usually known by that name.

The authors of the existing systems of life insurances are all poor mortals, sick, dying, or now dead, and not one of them, nor all of them, can preserve their own lives from the power and dominion of death and corruption. But the author of this system is the living God; he who lives forever; he who giveth life to every thing; him in whom we live, and move, and have our being; he who is the deep unfathomed "fountain of life." And with him associated in this work is his only begotten Son, who, quickened by the "Eternal Spirit," lives "by the power of an endless life," and of whom it was said, "In him was LIFE, and the LIFE was the LIGHT of men."

The real object of this system of insurance is far beyond that of all others. They do not attempt to give life, preserve life, prolong life, insure life, or restore life at all. So far as life is insured, men have no more life when insured than when uninsured. Insurance neither stays nor overcomes the power of death. It simply pays money to the living when the insured person is dead. And this has sometimes awakened the avarice of wicked men, and they have thought to gain this money by taking the lives of those who were thus insured.

But this system to which I allude does not substitute money for life; it proposes to give LIFE itself. Not to prevent death here, but to give back a better life after this mortal life has fled. For "the GIFT of God is ETERNAL LIFE."

I wish you now to look for a moment at some of the peculiar excellences that attend this system of "Life Insurance."

It is needful always that insurance be effected in a good company. One where there is an abundant capital. One that is not a sham and a fraud upon community. One, too, that is managed by men morally good; men who will not steal the funds intrusted to them, and who will equitably adjust all the righteous demands which may arise against it. And these desirable traits are pre-eminently found in the system of which I speak. The great God of heaven and earth, just, wise, almighty, glorious and immortal, he promises, he insures ETERNAL LIFE.

While in other systems life itself is not insured, but instead of it a sum of money is paid to the survivors after the death of the person insured, he deriving no personal benefit from it—in this system the person himself derives the entire benefit, and his life is really insured. "He that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he LIVE; and he that liveth and believeth in me shall never die—shall not die forever." John 11:25, 26. When these scenes of mortality are past, God shall make good his pledge, and bestow upon those who love him—life, eternal life. "He that loseth his life for my sake shall find it." It shall be no substitute of dollars and cents, but life itself in its eternal spring-tide, flowing from the very Godhead's depths.

In all other systems there are certain limits, beyond which insurance is not effected. It is only upon the healthy, those free from disease, and also (at the ordinary rates) those that are young, or in the prime of life. For the companies could not afford to insure, at usual prices, the aged, the feeble, or the sick. This system differs from them here. No class, age, sex, color, or country; no victims of disease, no infirm persons, none, however near the hour of dissolution, are cut off from the benefits of this system of "Life Insurance." Persons who have never known a day of health have been insured for all eternity. Persons smitten with mortal diseases, persons tottering on the very verge of the grave, have applied for this assurance, and have not been refused. And policies do not expire by limitation, nor do the rates increase with advancing years and increasing liability to death.

In all other systems the insurance is simply based upon acknowledged uncertainties. The company sometimes say, "We will pay you $10,000 if you die within ten years; if not, we pay you nothing;" and the person desiring insurance pays his ten, or twenty, or fifty dollars, with the understanding that there is no certainty that he will need the insurance, and if he does not, then his money, or the most of it, is a loss to him. He takes the risk of losing the cost of his policy while he lives, and the company take the risk of losing the amount of his insurance when he dies. True, statistics concerning the average of human life enable men to calculate the average risk, but of course many live and lose their ten dollars, where one dies and his friends gain their ten thousand.

But this system which I commend is based upon absolute CERTAINTIES. Death is certain. Our need of life is a certainty. We effect this insurance, knowing it will be needed. This is the understanding on both sides. We shall stand soon on the uttermost verge of mortal life. We shall need something beyond, and as this life slips from our grasp, or breaks asunder within it, we need to "lay hold on ETERNAL LIFE." This we are enabled to do by the great plan and purpose God has formed and developed in the gospel.

In all other systems the principle involved is merely that of debt and credit, of loss and gain. It is mainly a matter of self-interest on both sides. It is many paid for an equivalent to be rendered, with an assumed risk included. Not so here. This system proceeds upon principles of grace, not of debt. It is free insurance. It is "the GIFT of God." "God has given to us eternal LIFE, and this LIFE is in His Son." This gift is free, because none could purchase it. "Priceless, because above all price." It flows not from principles of speculation or self-interest, but from the free grace of God. As if the Rothschilds should devote all their great riches to the issuing of free policies of insurance to all who would come and get them; and yet this would soon use up all their immense wealth. But the great God is richer than all men. The wealth of the universe is His. With Him is "the fountain of life."

The terms of ordinary life insurance are necessarily kept within certain rates. Any company which goes upon a lower scale of premium will fail according to the ascertained laws of mortality. A certain amount of money is needful. Men without money cannot be insured. And here is a marked difference between the two systems. "He that hath no money" may come and be as welcome to this insurance as the richest or the greatest. Mercy is free; grace is free; life is FREE. "Without price" is God's standing stipulation. No man may change it. None may take toll of those who pass through the "strait gate." None may charge commission upon the policies by which God insures. Beggars and slaves, as well as priests and princes, may come and be accepted here.

In order to have life insured in ordinary systems, there must be a medical examination, and a certificate from the physician that you are in health; in no special danger of dying, or else insurance cannot be effected. No such evidence is requisite here. "They that are whole need not a physician, but they that are SICK." God requires no certificates of health, but rather a confession of disease. He is not pleased with our pretensions to self-righteousness and goodness. An insurance agent would stare should an applicant say, "I am in the last stages of consumption—will you insure my life?" He would say, "O, no, sir, you cannot be insured here." But our Savior delights to receive and examine just such miserable dying men as have no other help or hope. His invitation is, "Come unto me;" "and whoso cometh unto me will I in no wise cast out."

There are in all life insurance companies certain prohibitory conditions attached to policies; certain occupations, which are right and honest in themselves, but somewhat perilous, and certain localities of disease and danger, at their dangerous seasons, are prohibited. But there are no conditions of this kind connected with this system. "From sea to sea, and from the river to the ends of the earth" this insurance holds good. Amid the icebergs of the North or the simoons of the South—the pestilence that walks in darkness, or the destruction that wasteth at noonday—amid cholera, yellow fever, or plague—by land or by sea—in the desert, or in the dungeon; anywhere, everywhere where duty calls and where a righteous man may go, this insurance still holds good. No matter where the believer is; whether buried on land or in the ocean's depths; whether his dust be moldering in the sepulchre of his fathers, or his ashes be flung to the heedless winds by the hands of furious foes, he is sure of eternal existence, and "when Christ, who is our LIFE, shall appear, then shall we appear with him in glory." Then shall this corruptible put on incorruption, and this mortal shall put on IMMORTALITY.

There are, however, certain conditions of this life insurance, with which all must comply to secure it. First of all is this: Believe in the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved; confide in him; trust him with your all. You never would secure insurance in any company unless you had faith or confidence in them—in their plans, promises and honesty. So you must confide in Jesus Christ. He is your only hope. Look to him, cast yourself upon him, and seek to be saved by his grace and mercy alone. Second: You must obey his commandments, follow his example and abide in his love continually. You must leave the sins, and passions, and pomps and vanities of time. You must deny ungodliness and worldly lusts. You must be wholly the Lord's. Come then to Christ, sick, dying, lost one, come to him and live. Accept his terms and take his promise as your surety and support. You may trust in him and fear no evil.

Beware of spurious and fraudulent institutions. Those companies that insure very cheaply are unsafe. Be sure you have your insurance in a reliable company, however stringent the regulations are. Beware of those who say that all are insured, and that there is no danger. "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." Men are not insured by accident. Eternal life they must "lay hold" of, if they will have it.

Are you insured? The question is important. If life insurance of the present imperfect character is so important as men suppose, how much more so is that amazing plan which springs from the wealth of divine love, and which secures eternal life through Christ? Perishing man! you are doomed to die. "The wages of sin is death!" [illegible] the world, and death by sin; Death has passed upon all men for that all have sinned." But you may have life—eternal life! Will you not secure it? Oh, come to Christ! Take his words and cast yourself entirely upon his mercy. Give yourself wholly up to him. Do not delay. Do not forget this matter. Are you insured for eternity? Is your life insured? Do you object that you must seek wealth? "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose himself, or be cast away?" Ah! you are in danger. You slumber on the verge of death. Will you not come now to Christ and be forever safe?

Poor man—sick man—do not fear to come. Here is your only chance for "life insurance." Reject this and you lose all—you perish—you die! Accept this, secure this, and you shall live forever. Come! believe in Christ. Hand in your name. Confess him before men. Live to his glory.

Listen to this divine proposal: "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be SAVED." John 3: 16, 17. Will you have eternal LIFE?—"Leaflets," by H. L. H.

For the Crisis.

"That no Man should be moved by these Afflictions."

How unlike is the voice of nature to that of revelation! Repining, murmuring and discontent, are the result of the tribulation found in the natural heart. Being of the earth, earthy, the antidote for human wo has been sought for by the carnal mind within its own precincts, and as true peace and substantial happiness are not native plants of this mundane shore, the search has proved vain and fruitless, however ardently and earnestly pursued. The world would fain have its votaries believe, as they taste the cup of earthly pleasure, that peace and joy are to be found therein; that as they listen to the voice of the charmer, "charming never so sweetly," in their wanton purposes and selfish pursuits, they are accomplishing the great end of their creation. But listen to the voice of Inspiration: "There is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked"; and "the sinner being an hundred years old shall be accursed." Who then dare say that it shall go well with the wicked, when God hath said, "it shall go ill with him"; and that "he shall eat the fruit of his doings, and the reward of his hands shall be given him"? Thus "the sorrow of the world worketh death," to all who are the unhappy subjects thereof.

How unlike this sad and mournful conclusion, is the sanctified sorrow of the christian, although called to endure affliction and tribulation, as a part of his legacy, while traveling his rough and perilous journey; yet in their influence over his inbred corruptions, they are made through the grace attending them, to form a part of his highest enjoyments, and are often found among the most prolific sources of his spiritual improvement. Hear the testimony of an eminent apostle, whose life was one continued scene of sorrow in all its variety;—"In labors more abundant, in strife above measure, in prisons more frequent, in deaths oft." Of the Jews five times he received forty stripes save one, thrice was he beaten with rods, once was he stoned, thrice he suffered shipwreck, a night and a day was he in the deep. In journeyings often, in perils of waters, in perils of robbers, in perils by his own countrymen, in perils by the heathen, in perils in the city, in perils in the wilderness, in perils in the sea, in perils (the worst of all) among false brethren, in weariness and painfulness, in watchings often, in hunger and thirst; in fastings often, in cold and nakedness. Besides the things that were without, that came upon him daily, with the care of all the churches; and yet in view of all this great list of complicated sorrow, the greatest, perhaps, ever endured by any other follower of the Lamb, he could exclaim that the christian should not faint at these tribulations, "for though the outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day." "For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory."

We have often thought, if the apostle's sufferings in all their magnitude were considered light, and scarcely worth a transient notice when viewed in the light of eternity as he viewed them, what will be the estimate placed upon ours, we who live in modern times, when days of persecution, bonds and imprisonments, such as he knew, are passed away? O! will not our light afflictions, the most severe which any of us are called to endure, fall infinitely far below the apostle's? And shall we not in the future forever blush at our too frequent repinings at the little through which we are called to pass, when compared with the schedule which he has left behind for our contemplation and instruction? And that [illegible]forward, though the pathway be rugged, the burden heavy, and the heart sorrowful, yet in view of our eternity of bliss, see to it "that no man be moved at these afflictions, knowing that we are appointed thereto." The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, DECEMBER 19, 1860.

"Another Name."

In Isa. 65: 1, 15, we read, "I am sought of them that asked not for me; I am found of them that sought me not; I said, Behold me, unto a nation that was not called by name." The Lord then says to the Jews, "And ye shall leave your name for a curse unto my chosen; for the Lord God shall slay thee, and call his servants by another name." Luke says, "And the disciples were called CHRISTIANS first at Antioch."—Acts 11: 26. Who called them by this name? To this question we will seek an answer. Some suppose it was a nickname given by the enemies of the cross of Christ. We have formerly entertained this view; but a more careful examination has caused us to see the matter in a different light. The followers of Christ were called Nazarenes as a term of reproach, because it was thought no "good thing" could "come out of Nazareth." Paul was accused of being "a ringleader of the sect of the Nazarenes." Of these it is said, "For as concerning this sect, we know that every where it is spoken against." After a name of reproach has been given by the enemies of a cause, and become generally adopted, it is rare that they take another; because a new sect has usually the greatest reproach in its earliest history, when it receives its first title from its opponents; for this reason, we might well conclude that after the followers of Christ had been nicknamed "Nazarenes" by their enemies, and "every where . . . . spoken against," their persecutors would not be likely to adopt another; but be this as it may, we do not rest the evidence on this but on the meaning of the word rendered called in Acts 11: 26, which we will soon consider.

In the Old and New Testaments, good people are frequently denominated saints, to indicate their character. They are also spoken of as brethren to denote their relation to each other; and disciples to indicate their relation to Christ as learners; but we think the term christian is the family name for all the followers of Christ. This being true, the name would not be likely to occur very frequently in the conversation and writings of the Apostles. They speak of one another as "brethren," or some such familiar title, when talking of each other. The family name is seldom used in the family; so among the Lord's children.

We will now return to the examination of the word rendered called in Acts 11: 26, where we read, "And the disciples were called christians first at Antioch." The word translated called is kreematizo, which is defined as follows:—"to impart a divine warning or admonition, giving instructions or directions under the guidance of INSPIRATION; and passively, to receive a divine admonition, to be warned of God, be divinely instructed." "Intransitive, to be called, named, be known by a particular appellation, i. e., imposed on one from his business or office, Acts 11: 26, whence kreematismos, a response from God, a divine answer, communication or oracle."—Rom. 11: 4—[Greenfield's Lexicon.]

In order to settle the meaning of the word kreematizo, we will examine all the passages where the word occurs. When speaking of the wise men who went to visit the Savior in his infancy at Bethlehem, it is said they were "warned of God in a dream that they should not return to Herod." The words, "warned of God," are all translated from the one rendered called in Acts 11: 26. In the 22nd verse of the same chapter, the word occurs again, where it is said of Joseph, after he returned from Egypt with the infant Redeemer,—"Being warned of God in a dream, he turned aside into the parts of Galilee." In this example, the word kreematizo is rendered "warned of God" as in the 12th verse. It occurs again in Luke 2: 26, where it said of Simeon, "It was revealed unto him by the Holy Ghost, that he should not see death, before he had seen the Lord's Christ." In this example it is rendered was revealed. The revelation is from the Holy Spirit, hence from God. The next is in Acts 10: 22. When the men from Cornelius found Peter, they said to him, "Cornelius the centurion . . . . was warned from God by a holy angel to send for thee into his house, and to hear words of thee." The words in italics are from the one rendered called, in Acts 11: 26, which is next example. The word occurs again in Rom. 7: 3, where it is said, "so then if, while her husband liveth, she be married to another man, she shall be called an adulteress." This is a name given by God, or divine appointment, like the others examined. The word is here translated, "shall be called," omitting the authority, which is clearly understood. The next is in Heb. 8: 5. "Moses was admonished of God when he was about to make the tabernacle; for, see, saith he, that thou make all things according to the pattern showed to thee in the mount." In this example the word is rendered, "was admonished of God," i. e., he received divine instruction. The word appears again in Heb. 11: 7.—"By faith Noah, being warned of God of things not seen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house." Here it is translated, "warned of God." The next example is in Heb. 12: 25. "For if they escaped not who refused him that spake on earth, much more shall not we escape, if we turn away from him that speaketh from heaven." In this passage the word is rendered "him that spake," referring to Moses, who spoke for the Lord; as we read in Ex. 7: 1; "And the Lord said unto Moses, See, I have made thee a God to Pharaoh; and Aaron thy brother shall be thy prophet." Hence in this example, he spoke by divine authority. In the last part of Heb. 12: 25, the word kreematizo is understood, in the clause, "much more shall not we escape, if we turn away from him that speaketh from heaven." The word speaketh is supplied by the translators, but it is clearly implied, and refers again to the Lord. These are all the examples where the word kreematizo, rendered called in Acts 11: 26, occurs in the New Testament. Kreematismos, a variation in the form of a noun, occurs once, and is defined, "A response from God, a divine answer, communication or oracle. Rom. 11: 4."—[Greenfield's Lexicon.] The passage where it occurs, Rom. 11: 4, reads as follows:—"But what saith the answer of God unto him? I have reserved to myself seven thousand men, who have not bowed the knee to the image of Baal." This is the saying of the Lord to Elijah; and the word is rendered, "answer of God."

We have now examined all the examples where the word is found; and it is evident that all its uses are in harmony with the definition of the word which says it signifies, "to impart a divine warning or admonition, giving instructions under the guidance of INSPIRATION," unless the exception is in favor of Acts 11: 26. Had this been translated in harmony with the other examples, it would read, "And the disciples were called" of God "Christians first in Antioch."

New Bedford.

Our meetings in this city have been very profitable and interesting. The church is in a healthy state, and doing much to spread the truth of the Lord in different portions of the city; especially among the poor. We were rejoiced to find among them such a deep anxiety for the welfare of those who are despised and rejected by the popular professors of these last days. In doing this, they exhibit the spirit of their heavenly Master. O that we could see more of such work among the churches of Christ.

The audiences were large and very attentive. The truth is evidently spreading in that city, under the faithful labors of Bro. Couch, their pastor. Several requested prayers and were blessed. All things look encouraging for a good work during the winter. Our love-feast Sabbath morning was a heavenly season to the saints. Seventy spoke in forty-five minutes, and gave real heart-cheering testimonies, which indicated a firm purpose to endure to the end. We shall expect to hear glad tidings as the results of further labors of their pastor in harmony with an active church. May the Lord bless them abundantly.

Imitate Christ.

We clipped the following sensible remarks from the Gospel Banner, published at Geneva, Ill.

If we drink intoxicating drinks, smoke or chew tobacco, take snuff, eat opium, etc., etc., wherein are we better than those who know not the truth, and our example safer to follow? How by these shall we make it appear that we are following the example of Jesus,—walking in his steps?

Imagine, if you can, the Son of God, as he perambulated the streets of Jerusalem, accompanied by his disciples, entering a drinking saloon, where congregated the sons of Belial, and the frail daughters of Eve, and calling for brandy, a plug of tobacco, or a cigar, and then pursuing his walk, offering his burnt-offering, or chewing his quid. Would it, to say the least, have been a becoming trait in his character? The very thought seems polluting; and I rejoice to know that we cannot associate such ideas with him, who we believe was "holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners." If behavior like this would have been derogatory to the Son of God, is it not equally so to his brethren, who also are sons of God. However, such indulgences accord not with my notions of that purity and self-denial which ought to characterize all who "name the name of Christ." Far be it from me to wish to abridge the Christian liberty of any brother in Christ, or to put a yoke, "which God has not enforced," on the neck of any disciple.

There is a rule laid down by the apostle Paul, which I would call the brethren's attention to, and if they will give heed to it, it will materially assist them to a right course of action; it is this: "Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." 1 Cor 10: 31. Then brethren if ye eat eels, horse flesh, swine's flesh, or any other flesh, it is to be done for God's glory and not for sensual gratification. And if you chew a quid, smoke a pipe or cigar, or titulate your olfactory nerves with ground glass and tobacco; why see to it, that your motive is purely to the glory of God and not fleshly indulgence. And if you seek the "social glass," be it whiskey-punch, rum, gin, brandy, port, or ale, in the drinking of these, the same motive, the "glory of God," is to be kept in view, and not the gratification of animal appetite. Let those who are able to indulge, do so; for my part, I am weak, and think I can better glorify God by non-indulgence in these. Let brethren judge for themselves, if this be will-worship.

Editorial Notices.

THE SON OF GOD.—This is an instructive work by H. Grew, Philadelphia, and sets forth the truth in a clear aspect on this subject. All who are not satisfied that Christ is the SON OF GOD should read this work. It contains over seventy pp. of sound doctrine on this point. Price 10 cts. For sale by the author and at this office.

HUMAN DESTINY.—This is a new volume by Prof. Hudson, containing his argument with Sylvanus Cobb against universal salvation; an exposition of "The Rich Man and Lazarus," "The Rights of Wrong;" and "Reviewers Reviewed." These are all bound in one volume, and constitute a valuable work for the library of the Bible student. Price, 60 cts., postage 9 cts.

Also, Human Destiny, without the above tracts; bound, 44 cts., postage 6 cts; paper cover, 25 cts; postage 3 cts. Also, Reviewers Reviewed, or Brief Replies to Various Criticisms; price 10 cts, postage 1 ct. The above works we recommend to the perusal of our friends.

"THE TWO ADAMS."—This is an interesting and instructive tract just issued by Bro. T. M. Preble, Concord, N. H. We think it the best thing on that subject we have ever seen. Every body should have a copy. Price 5 cents single; postage 1 cent; $3 per one hundred.

Bro. Preble has also issued an interesting tract on the parable of "the ten virgins." Price 3 cents single; postage 1 cent; $2 per hundred. These tracts are for sale at the Crisis office, and by the author.

Southern Dangers.

The following extract from the letter of a lady residing in South Carolina to her uncle in New York, will give the reader some idea of the state of things in the slave states. She says:—

"You have heard that our servants all love their masters and their master's families, and would lay down lives for them—that the colored race in the South prefer slavery to freedom—that they would not be free if they could, etc., etc. That is but the poetry of the case, the reality consists in sleeping upon our arms at night—in doubly bolting and barring our doors—in establishing and maintaining an efficient patrol force—in buying watch-dogs, and in taking turns in watching our sleeping children, to guard them and ourselves from the vengeance of these same 'loving servants'—a vengeance which, though now smouldering, is liable to burst out at any moment, to overwhelm the State in spite of the Palmetto flags or State precautions. They have already learned enough to give them an idea of what is going on in the State and nation, and this knowledge they have not gained from Abolitionists, as some suppose, but from the conversation of their masters indirectly held in their presence. They have already heard of Lincoln's election, and heard also that he is for giving them their liberty, and you may imagine the result."

"Their Influence."

In the Home Missionary, for Dec. 1860, published by the American Home Missionary Society, Bible House, Astor Place, New York, we find a report from a Missionary in Northern Ill., which is quite encouraging. It reads as follows:—

"I am situated in the midst of error. The Advent church here is in a flourishing condition. They are composed of disaffected members from almost all evangelical churches, having no creed to bind them together except baptism by immersion. They are essentially Unitarian; hold that all of man, when he dies, is dead, "soul, body and spirit;" that he sleeps until Christ shall come (which time they think is near;) then he will raise the dead, impart to his people immortality, burn up the wicked, and assume regal authority, having his headquarters at Jerusalem. This whole body is a mass of error, though they have drawn and are drawing many respectable men into their delusions. Their influence is fearful. I see nothing now so much to fear as their influence. I am attempting to stay it by every means in my power. In order to secure the attention of young people, I commenced a course of lectures to them six weeks since, which have secured good audiences, and shall continue them just as long as I can interest them."

For the Crisis.

Pre-existence of Christ.

Under this head Bro. Preble, in the last Crisis, has asked five questions for some one to answer.

To the first question I would say, the Adam that was formed of the dust of the ground was the first Adam. To the second and third questions, I answer yes. To the fourth, no. The fifth reads thus: "If the first or eldest Adam did not pre-exist before the world was, how could the second or younger Adam pre-exist before the world was?"

In answer to this we say,—

1. If Adam the first had existed as a being before the world was, he would not have been Adam until he became associated with earth, from which the name Adam is derived. So of Christ; though he was before the world was, he was not Adam till he became flesh, and so was the seed of the woman, which seed was from the earth.

2. Christ before he came in the flesh was not Adam, and was not so called. Before the world was, he was called "The Word," and also called God. "In the beginning was the Word . . . and the Word was God. . . . The world was made by him. . . . The Word was made flesh and dwelt among us."—John, 1st chap. When this being who made the world became flesh, he became the last Adam more than four thousand years after the first Adam.

3. If it were affirmed of the first Adam that he had glory with the Father before the world was, that by him the world was made, that without him was not any thing made that was made, we of course would say that he had pre-existence—that is, that he existed as a being before he became Adam. Now as all this, and more, is affirmed of Christ, we say that he had a being before he came in the flesh.

If we commence the existence of our Savior with his being made flesh, or with his first Advent, of course we make him more than four thousand years younger than the first Adam. And by consequence the first Adam, had he lived till now, would have been so many years older. But if we would have Christ's existence where Revelation has put it, before the "kosmos" was, "whose goings forth have been from everlasting," we make him somewhat older than the first Adam. J. S. WHITE.

Prayer and Faith.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—Who of you have not heard of the Fulton Street prayer meeting? Some of you have read the book, no doubt, giving a history of its rise and progress. It is full of thrilling incidents, illustrative of "The Power of Prayer." Petitions are daily sent in on behalf of an unconverted, or wandering husband, wife, brother, sister, or friend; for those who do business on the great deep, and for the miner of California. Reports are daily brought to that meeting demonstrative of the fact that those prayers are the effectual and fervent prayers which avail much. To send a request on behalf of a friend, is almost with a certainty to secure his or her salvation. From distant cities and remote lands, the testimony comes confirmatory of the efficacy of those believing prayers. To read the book, and the reports given in the papers, you would be led to think that it was literally verified to those disciples, "Ask what ye will, and it shall be done." They are enough to remove unbelief from the heart of a doubting Thomas.

Now I have had from my early experience a great deal of faith in the efficacy of prayer. I believe that God is willing to hear and answer our petitions in regard to temporal blessings. Ever since about eighteen years ago, I prayed God for a pair of shoes, and they came, I have had much confidence in asking for those things I needed, when I saw no way by which to obtain them otherwise. Many have been the special answers given me in this respect. Long time ago, I took the promise connected with the command, "Be careful for nothing, but in everything by prayer and supplication let your requests be made known unto God, with thanksgiving," and when I obey the requirement, I realize "the peace that passeth understanding."

I am not unfrequently interrogated by letter in regard to my faith for restoring power, as applied to the sick. That every one has this faith, I do not believe. That any one possesses it at all times, having the ability to pray in faith for whom they will, I do not believe. That some do have this special faith more than others, I do believe. It is a gift of God. That some are enabled to exercise their faith when offering prayer for others, without having any previous knowledge of the fact, I do believe. I know cases where persons knelt to offer prayer for friends hopelessly sick, or diseased, and the Spirit came to their aid, inspired faith, and the work was done at once. This faith is not exercised by efforts put forth to believe. It cannot be exercised at will. But let us put ourselves in the position where this faith may be inspired within our hearts.

By a contemplation of God's power, as exhibited in the Scriptures, and the illustrations abounding around us, let us stir ourselves up to earnest prayer. If we come with all the sincerity, fervency, and faith we already possess in behalf of our afflicted friends, we may feel the Spirit helping our infirmities, enabling us to take hold on God, and to exercise that faith which assures us our prayer is heard and accepted. We do not pray enough of the right kind of praying.

There is much formal prayer. We pray morning and evening because it is a habit. O, we want to feel our need, and pray down in our hearts, simple requests made known to God, not so much in a praying tone as childlike converse. We need to talk with our Father God, and Savior Jesus Christ. Jesus will pray for us. The Spirit will intercede for us, and we may receive the blessings we need.

Permit me to send a request, not to the Fulton St. prayer meeting, but to the "general assembly" of believers, asking prayers in behalf of an invalid sister, who, if restored to sufficient health, would devote her talents and strength to the work of God. To me she is a stranger personally, but we have corresponded for a year. She is a sufferer from disease. She has sought unto many physicians, but without being benefitted. In a letter just received, she wishes me to ask you to make her a special object of prayer. It is no matter if you do not know her name—God will know who is meant.

Now how many will unite in prayer for her recovery at seven o'clock every night for one week? Do not deem it a trouble. "Pray one for another that ye may be healed." It will benefit you, certainly, to pray for the afflicted. Two minutes of sincere prayer, will do more than an hour of formal supplication. Yours in the gospel hope, MARY D. WELLCOME.

For the Crisis.

WAKEFIELD'S VERSION OF 1 COR. 15: 24–28.—Verse 24. Then will the end be, when God the Father delivereth up the Kingdom to him; during which he will destroy all dominion and all authority and power: verse 25, for he will reign till he hath put every enemy under his feet: verse 27, inasmuch as God hath put all things under his feet: verse 26, and so the enemy death will be destroyed at last. Verse 27.—Now, when the Scripture saith, all things are put under him, it manifestly means a subjection besides the subjection to him, who put all these things under Christ. Verse 28. But the Son himself, when all these things are put under him, will also submit to God, who put all things under him; that God may be all in all."

WAKEFIELD'S NOTES TO 1 COR. 15: 24–28.—Verse 24. The received reading of this verse anticipates and is not consistent with verse 28th, nor with other passages of the New Testament. All difficulties are avoided by present translation, which rests on the authority of the Æthiopic version. Moreover, the Coptic and Syriac versions have pasan dunamin.* Verses 27 and 26. I have transposed these two verses to avoid the ambiguity of the pronouns: and so the Æthiopic translator: and all the ancient versions but one acknowledge a connecting particle in verse 26. The latter part of the 27th verse, as usually understood, is complete absurdity. The Apostle's view was to prove the mediatorial kingdom of the Messiah from this part of Scripture here quoted. This power of ektos † will, I hope, be ascertained on some future opportunity.—[Communicated by J. E.

A Chance for All.

Webster's Dictionary, unabridged pictorial edition, is one of the best (if not the very best) dictionaries in the English Language. Price $6,50. The New York "Independent" is one of the largest and best religious weekly newspapers published in the United States. It has H. W. Beecher's sermons, contributions from Mrs. H B. Stow, Dr. Tyng, T. L. Cuyler, and many other able writers. Price $2 per year. Now if you will send the names and post office address;—town, county and state, of three persons, who do not take the Independent, with $6, they will send the Independent for one year to the three subscribers and give you one Webster's Dictionary. Names must be sent in before Jan., 1861.

The Dictionary can be sent by express, or if you want any books from H. L. H., you may have it sent to 138 William St., N. Y., to his care and he will send it or order it sent in the package. What three brethren will club and take the Independent, and get "Webster" for some poor preacher? Send your letters with the $6 and the names to Joseph H. Richards, 5 Beekman St., New York City, and get the worth of your money. H. L. HASTINGS.

For the Crisis.

☞ I dislike to use the columns of a paper for dunning purposes; but I have about $100 to raise by the 1st of January, and letters cost time as well as postage. Any friend who is owing for books will confer a favor by sending to the Crisis office, or to the care of James Munroe & Co., (134 Washington St.,) my present publishers.

For the Crisis.

To the Ministers.

BRO. GRANT:—Permit me through the Crisis to give a gentle hint to preachers, who give out appointments and do not fill them. It has been the case a number of times in this place; and it is a disappointment to those who want to hear the word of the Lord. When people come seven and eight miles to an evening meeting it is an evidence they want to hear. And I would also say to the servants of the Lord that as there have been no meetings in this place for a long time, and no place open for them, I open my house freely and cheerfully; and if any of the Lord's servants are disposed to send an appointment to Brimfield and fill it, they will be kindly received at my house. Yours,

J. E. AINSWORTH.

☞ That story of Thor, who was sent to drain the drinking horn in Asgard, and to wrestle with the old woman, and to run with the runner Loki, and presently found that he had been drinking up the sea, and wrestling with Time, and racing with Thought, describes us who are contending, amid these seeming trifles, with the supreme energies of Nature.

☞ Piety is not to be judged by theology. Theology is, in a large way, to be judged by piety.

Correspondence.

From Bro. R. V. Lyon.

Bro. Grant:—Thinking that it may be interesting to some of the readers of the "Crisis" to know the whereabouts of an old pilgrim, who has from childhood been journeying for the "highlands of glory" through sunshine and storm,—also what he is now doing,—therefore I write. I left the Wilbraham camp for Southbridge, where I spent a number of days in visiting my relations and old associates; gave one discourse in the school-house, where I received the first principles of my education. It was full of human beings, and I had a good time in speaking to them, upon the things concerning the Christ and the kingdom of God. On the first Sunday in Sept., I addressed a large congregation who assembled in the first Baptist meeting house in Ashford, Ct., on the mission of the Christ into our world—profound attention was given. With this people I was settled three years as their preacher, and with them I stand connected as a preacher, from the fact that I have never withdrawn, neither have they cut me off. No people that I have ever met with, receive me more cordially than they have always done.

In the afternoon of the same day, I preached at the Axe Factory on the time of the Master's return, met with many brethren, had a joyful time. After the close of the meeting we retired to the water, where I had the opportunity of inducting one willing soul into the Christ by a burial in water. With this people I have often labored for some eighteen years. After attending to some worldly business, I bade farewell to friends and acquaintances and started for C. W., where I have labored most of the time for some two and a half years. Stopped at Hebron, N. Y., and gave four discourses to large congregations. Had a good time. The church in H. was raised up under my labors in 1849–50. Called at Chateauguay, and gave one discourse. Reached Canada to fill my appointment on Sunday the 16th of Sept. The gathering was large. Our meeting was at Adams' Mills. Twenty, who had been previously baptized, united with the Church of God at South Gower (for this is the name we take). Three more Elders were chosen by the church, and set apart by myself, by solemn ordination, to fill the responsible office of Elder.

Since that time I have been preaching almost every evening and three times on the first day of the week. My field of labor is large, and it requires a man of iron nerve to fill it. Sometimes my congregations are very large and sometimes small. Truth is gaining ground, from the fact that it has led men and women to a reformation of character and to the obedience of the one faith, the one hope and one baptism. Since my return I have baptized twenty-seven into the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, making forty-five since the middle of June last. Three of them were members of the Roman Catholic communion previous to their embracing the gospel. Glory be to God that truth has not lost its power to save men and women.

I believe that 1866 is the date for the periods of Daniel and John to close, and this has been my faith for some eight years. O, solemn time for mortals to live!

Brookline, C. W.

From W. H. Wild.

Bro. Grant:—It rejoices my heart to see once more in the Crisis just such epistles as it carried in '54—short and sweet, and right to the point. I have been up mast-head on the old ship, and glory to God, with chart and spy-glass in hand, I cry to those below on deck, hoping that my voice will also reach those that are sleeping in the cabin and cause them from henceforth to be all awake.

O! sailor, see, the land is nearing,
With its vernal fruits and flowers,
On, just yonder, oh! how cheering,
Bloom forever Eden's bowers.
Hark! the choral strains there ringing,
Wafted on the balmy air,
See the millions, hear them singing,
Soon the pilgrims will be there.

It is glorious news to me to know that we certainly must soon see the sign of the Son of man. According to the words of the Savior, probation ends there. If the darkening of the sun and the falling of the stars were the sign of the Son of man as some affirm, I ask, did these signs cause all the tribes of the earth to mourn? Nay, verily; for all the tribes of the earth did not witness them. Brethren, this sign will not be seen until the heavens depart as a scroll when rolled together. Glorious sight to those who love his appearing.

Brethren, I beseech you, preach the coming of Jesus. Let the prophecies be your deepest study, for they, above all truths, are the most practical. Lay aside this time setting away off in the future, and let those around you know that even now the Bridegroom is preparing to come. It is a fact that cannot be overthrown, that the 17th of Revelations is almost fulfilled. How long would it take for these ten uncrowned kingdoms to fulfill what is lacking?

Let us lay aside all clamor and bickerings. My heart's desire and prayer to God is, that from henceforth you will as brethren beloved, be united in this one sublime truth, concerning the soon coming of Jesus; and may our daily walk and conversation be in harmony with what we believe.

That we may all be ready,
To meet him in the air,
When Gabriel's mighty trumpet
Shall be sounding everywhere.

I am, brethren, while letting my light shine around me here in Pleasantville, getting just such pay as Master said I should have;—the scoffs of the cold and formal sects, with the wicked helping them; but, bless God, this settles me in the faith that I am on the right track, and that my dear Jesus is soon coming.

From R. Evans.

Mr. Grant:—Dear Sir, permit me to make known my position and wants to you and that briefly. I would make an apology for thus addressing you, but that I have evidence that you are ever ready to aid a seeker after Bible truth—and such I trust I am.

My position—earnestness to know the Bible's teaching concerning man's nature and destiny. Can you aid me in securing such? I think you can. In fact, you are, in your several discussions, namely, Clayton, Litch, etc. etc. . . I am a young man looking forward to the christian ministry, and yet, I can never fill such if man is mortal, providing that the popularisms of the present are God's eternal truth, and the popularists have the power to shackle, gag and ostracize. The former I question, viz: man's immortality, etc. The latter I challenge, as long as God gives me breath and grace. Passiveness and mindlessness are not mine as yet, and I pray God they never may be while truth, humanity, and God's honor are impeached.

Obituary Notices.

Died, in Danielsonville, Nov. 15th, 1860, of congestion of the brain, Charlie H., only son of Charles C. and Ann E. Bennett, aged fourteen months.

This was a sudden stroke. Charlie was the picture of health. Death had excited no suspicion of its intended assault. The joys of these parents, as they often forgot the fatigues of this toilsome life amid the evening or midday sports of their little one, were not wont to be dampened by thoughts of the enemy's power. But the tyrant death spares not silvery age, nor is he moved to tenderness by the beauty or innocence of infancy,—fond affection pleads with him in vain,—he spares not what we love,—his wintry blast nips the choicest bud,—his poisonous breath fades the sweetest flower. Thus was this little "olive plant" smitten in an hour, struggled with severe disease for a few days, and then sunk into the quiet slumbers of death.

Hearts heavy with sorrow mourn his loss. They hear no more its nightly breathings—no more the accents of childish glee. They wait in vain its waking. They hear no more the soft tapping of its tottering footsteps. The house is lonely now. How cruel, death! yes, cruel! He smiles (if smile he can) at our grief—he revels when our hearts are broken—he boasts possession of our treasures—he triumphs while our sorrows last. But is there none to pity, none to save? Yes, He who was moved at Rachel's weeping, cheers us too by his promise. He who wept with Martha sympathizes with our grief. He who gave back from death a widow's child, shall raise up our children too; of such shall be the kingdom. Charlie will be there. May he find a father and a mother there who loved him here. I trust he will. At his burial the writer endeavored to show, from 1 John 4:8, 9, the love of God in providing a way of life for our mortal race. H. F. C.

Died, in West Martinsburgh, Oct. 30th, 1860, Lobdell Wood, in the seventy-eighth year of his age.

The author was personally acquainted with the subject of this notice from a short time after his conversion to God, which was in September, 1807, as I came into Lewis County in this time of a general revival of religion through the then spiritual Methodist preachers, under whose labors our beloved brother was brought from nature to grace, and, to use his own words, like pewter in the melting mould and fire of God's love, and joining under the cross the Methodists and making an open profession of christianity, and in his consistent life gave witness that through faith in the gospel of Christ to be the power of God unto salvation from the power of sin, and in good hope founded on the resurrection rejoiced in some degree in anticipation of victory over the last enemy, when this mortal shall put on immortality. But it seems after a number of years the primitive ardor and love of the Methodists was chilled; and as to myself, after I had found Christ on the altar of sacrifice, in withdrawing it and in not holding on to Christ as my only standard in his fullness, and measuring myself by others, I was not wise, and the effect was leanness and poverty of soul; and probably this was the case with our brother. But his thirsty and capacious soul could not rest here. And here I shall make an apology for him in going to visit and get acquainted with the Shakers, for which he was reproached, and it was thought by some he had joined them. But not so. Their economy, order, and harmony and plainness were such that drew his attention. But then that man of God, Wm. Miller, arose, and by the light of divine revelation which was thrown on the world he was at once awake to the thrilling and most important of all subjects—Christ's second coming as viewing it with joy nigh; and being with him in his dying moments, I can witness that in this faith he died. And thus it was with Lobdell Wood. Having taking the word of God which is boundless, he arose above all narrow contracted sectarianism, and could he have spoken, no doubt he would have exclaimed, "I have fought a good fight, I have kept the faith. Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous Judge shall give me at that day, and not to me only, but to all them that love his appearing." Moses Tallmadge.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

[Advices of the 29th ult.]

It was currently reported that Francis Second had fled from Gaeta.

The Turin journals assert that diplomatic intercourse will soon be resumed between Prussia and Victor Emmanuel.

The Roman province of Velletri had been occupied by French troops, at the request of the Roman Government, and by agreement with Sardinia.

Forty volunteers from the Duchy of Castro had invaded the town of Aaqapendente. They disarmed the Papal soldiers, and hoisted the arms of Savoy. The Papal Governor escaped.

Dates from Constantinople of the 21st say that the Bavarian community propose to secede to Roman Catholicism, because the Porte refused them a separate Patriarchate.

[Per Europa.]

Paris, Dec. 1. The Pays says that the stay of Victor Emmanuel in Sicily will be of short duration.

The Patrie states that according to the latest news insurrectionary movements were increasing in the Abbruzzi. Col. Bedagrange, with seven thousand Sardinian troops, occupied the defiles of Mount Vellino, a position of importance. Several guerrilla companies were being organized, and the Piedmontese were forming flying columns in order to act energetically on the points menaced.

Naples, Nov. 30. A commission composed of Sardinian and Neapolitan officers has been appointed to examine the titles of the officers of the Two Sicilies who have adhered to the new government.

An important reactionary movement, caused by priests and lazzaroni, took place yesterday. Several persons were arrested, and the demonstration was suppressed. Tranquility prevails.

ITALY.

The garrison of Gaeta had made a sortie, in order to capture the strategical positions in the suburbs, but were repulsed with great loss. The following is given as the position of affairs:

Gaeta, Nov. 19. The Piedmontese fleet has returned to Naples, the intention being to make an attack on the land side. The advanced Piedmontese posts were 1500 metres from the moles and forts. They were placing 150 mortars in a line to open fire, and three out of the five batteries constructing were ready. The besieged kept up an ineffectual fire to obstruct the construction of the batteries. Typhus fever prevailed in the garrison, which was too crowded—numbering 13,000. The Piedmontese numbered 15,000.

A state of siege had been established in the Abruzzi, and all persons bearing arms without permission, or guilty of exciting the peasantry, or insulting the national flag, were to be shot.

Count Cavour's reply to the recent Prussian despatch, in which the Sardinian policy was censured, has been published. He insists that the question of the Umbria, the Marches and the two Sicilies is purely Italian, and in no way affecting the rights of other powers. He points out that Sardinia is the only conservative power in Italy capable of overcoming the really revolutionary spirit, and warmly appeals for the European sympathy instead of rebuke.

Forty volunteers from the Duchy of Castro had invaded the town of Aguapendente. They disarmed and imprisoned the Pontifical gendarmes and hoisted the arms of Savoy.

[By Telegraph to Queenstown.]

Victor Emmanuel left Naples Nov. 30th, and arrived at Palermo Dec. 1st, where he was enthusiastically received.

The Bishop of Loretta has excommunicated the clergy of Santa Carta for receiving Victor Emmanuel.

FRANCE.

The Paris correspondents of the Brussels journals agree in stating that the ministerial changes in France are intended to inaugurate a more liberal policy, and that the Emperor himself was the first to propose the introduction of more popular measures.

ITALY.

The latest phase of Italian affairs is thus stated by the Liverpool Mercury:

"The task of reorganizing Naples, now committed to Farini, is perhaps beset with difficulties quite as great as Garibaldi had to contend with in the conquest of that kingdom. Farini himself says that the long continued immorality disseminated by the Bourbon government, and the confusion introduced into every thing by the men who surrounded Garibaldi, have created immense difficulties; but still he does not despair. He sees in the energy of the National Guard of Naples a sign that there is a party there, chosen by the nation, on which the government can rely for restoring order and security while preserving liberal institutions. When the Bourbon shall have abandoned his last stronghold, the hopes of the reactionists will become weaker and the power of the new government for action stronger.

The approaching Parliamentary election will be for the Neapolitans a seasonable relief, and at the same time a guaranty for the stability of the new order of things. The Pope, however, has endeavored to throw obstacles in the way of the new government. An order issued from Rome by the Sacred Penitentiary was intercepted by General Cialdini. It is an injunction laid upon the Neapolitan clergy that they shall reply severely to any communication made to them by the new government; that they shall refuse the sacred rites, and preserve the strictest secrecy relative to this very injunction."

The Reign of Terror.

It is a fact which strikingly indicates the excitement of feeling at the South, that one of the most eminent scientific men now living in the North—a man who was born at the South, and is thoroughly conservative—recently had a narrow escape from being hung as an abolitionist, while passing through Mississippi! His offence was the expression of a hope that the Union would be preserved!

"An intelligent gentleman, whose name we are not at liberty to mention, but who is well known throughout the whole country, has recently returned from a tour through some of the Southern States. He is himself a native of a slave State, and so far as he has any prepossessions in favor of either section of the country, they are partial to the South rather than to the North. He has traveled extensively in Europe, and he says that he never saw, even in Austria, such a reign of terrorism, such a despotism, as he has just witnessed in his journey. Conservative, union-loving men are awed into silence. A gloom hangs like a pall over society. Men, who in their hearts dissent from the opinions of the secessionists, are now ruled as with a rod of iron, and speak in whispers, and with the utmost caution.

Our friend says that on reaching a certain place he saw a number of men near the telegraph office talking earnestly about some item of news which had just been received, and he ventured to ask what it was. He was told that some of the federal officeholders at Charleston had resigned. He mildly expressed his regret that they had done so. What was his astonishment to see a gigantic fellow approach him and with oaths threaten to hang him as an abolitionist. He explained that he was no abolitionist, and that he was a Southerner by birth, and was allowed to go on his way at last. But for a while danger looked imminent, and not a man among all the company of bystanders uttered a word of remonstrance against the giant who threatened him.—Journal.

Garibaldi and Mazzini.—The Naples correspondent of the London Daily News, writing on the 9th inst., says:

On Monday night Mazzini had a long interview with Garibaldi, and I believe that the best understanding exists between them. Both are resolved on immediate action, and however great may be the disposition to repose and consolidate on the part of the central government, it will be found to be impossible. There is an interesting incident connected with this visit which shows the straightforward manly character of Garibaldi. Mazzini intimated that perhaps he might wish him to leave the place secretly; on which Garibaldi took him through the midst of his people. He will never disavow a friend in the eyes of the world. He thinks that Mazzini has done more than any man living for the liberties of Italy. The question on which they are agreed is not that of republicanism, but of action, and that of a great and powerful action to bring about the unity of Italy. Garibaldi asked Mazzini if he would allow him to intercede with Victor Emmanuel to get his sentence reversed; but the triumvir positively declined. He will, therefore, leave immediately, unless he be arrested, which it will be difficult to manage, though Mazzini never used a disguise. When, after leaving Rome in 1848, the steamer touched at Leghorn, great fears were entertained lest he might be discovered and arrested. The captain therefore put him in a closet, but he could not bear the confinement, and coming out began to wash and wipe the glasses. The Austrian gendarmes came in, passed by him, and searched the closet. In 1857 he had another narrow escape, when the carabineers came to his house to arrest him. His friends were under great apprehension, and urged him to escape, but slouching his hat and taking off his coat, he went and opened the door. The order for arrest was presented, and Mazzini seeing it was en regle said they might enter, and would find his master inside. As they went in, Mazzini walked out.

Of Garibaldi's appearance during his last day in Naples, and the effect of his departure, the correspondent of the Morning Post says:

I saw him constantly, at least whenever he was to be seen, during the whole of the day. His expression was singularly sad and solemn; he seemed ill at ease, he certainly was so, for the countenance of this single-hearted man is a true index to the feelings of his heart. To one of his officers who asked him to have the rank which he had held in the Garibaldian army confirmed in that of King Victor Emmanuel, he replied—"I have spoken to the King on this subject. Let us hope"—(but the "Let us hope" was spoken in a very desponding tone)—"Let us hope that he will keep his promise." In the evening, unexpectedly, an immense crowd, collected under his windows, with torches and music, sending forth shouts of "Long live Garibaldi! Long live Garibaldi!" He appeared at the balcony, evidently affected, and then immediately withdrew, and six times the shouts of the people again brought him out. The last time you saw the tears trickling from his eyes, because the people were no longer shouting the world-cry of "Long live Garibaldi! Long live Garibaldi!" but instead, were sending up passionate exclamations of "Do not leave us! Remain! remain!" He was deeply affected when he finally withdrew.

The departure of Garibaldi has created an immense sensation in Naples, and has even given rise to a certain dislike towards the Piedmontese. It is said that he left in such haste from being ill treated by the King. Of this story I do not believe a single syllable, because I believe the King really likes Garibaldi, while Garibaldi is sincerely attached to him, little as he cares for the members of his Cabinet.

A Lamentable Fact.—The Brighton (England) Herald says that Spiritualism, instead of losing ground in England, "is flourishing and vigorous, not only among the ignorant and insane, but among men of repute, who might fairly be looked on as superior to any system of trickery so barefaced and wicked. At this moment there are several literary circles in London who are lending their aid to the spread of the delusion, and we could name more than one eminent man who is a decided victim to it. Sittings are frequent in the best circles, mediums are tolerated in the highest quarters; and even the Church does not fail to add its quota to the herd of the misguided and the deluded." Among the recent converts are Lord Lyndhurst, Sir E. Bulwer Lytton, Robert Chambers, Mrs Browning, and many other literary and scientific celebrities.—Trans.

Life of Hiram Munger.

A second edition of the above work is now in the hands of the printer, and will be ready about the first of the new year. In addition to what has been published in the first book, there is a large appendix, containing some deeply interesting items regarding the trials and persecutions to which the pioneers of the Advent faith were subjected; beside a number of valuable recipes for various maladies. Also, a life-like portrait will accompany this edition. Owing to the extra expense, the price will be 60 cents, postage 8 cts. Our friends will please send in their orders soon, as we anticipate a rapid sale of the book.

Four Days' Meeting.

If the Lord will, there will be a meeting held at Campville, Ct., commencing Thursday evening, Dec. 27th, and continuing over Sunday. Bro. H. L. Hastings is expected to be present, and as many other preaching brethren as can make it convenient to attend.

Brethren and sisters in adjoining towns are invited to come in the name of the Lord, full of faith, and praying that the blessing of God may rest upon the people. Brethren coming will do well to provide their own food, as the brethren have no conveniences for boarding.

A. Elliott,
J. Hine,
Chas. Goodrich,
L. G. Humphreville.

☞ Brethren coming to South Reading to preach, are expected to address the committee before sending their appointments.

John Wiley,
Wm. Lathe,
G. R. Coburn.

Change of Time for Yarmouth Meeting.

The brethren and sisters in this place, feeling anxious to make extra efforts to save souls and help along the cause of the Lord in this vicinity, propose having a protracted meeting in "Institute Hall," commencing Jan. 18th, 1861, at 6 1-2 o'clock in the evening, and continuing as long as may be thought best. Brethren O. R. Fassett, and other ministering brethren are expected to be present to preach the word; and we cordially invite brethren and sisters generally, to come to the meeting to labor together for the good of souls. We shall do what we can to take care of all who come. In behalf of all interested, R. R. York.

Yarmouth, Me., Dec. 3d, '60.

Notice.

Northern Illinois and Southern Wisconsin Quarterly Conference will be held at Harvard, McHenry Co., Ill., to commence Friday, Dec. 28th, 2 o'clock, where Bro. Reed may appoint. In behalf of the church,

Robert Crown, Evangelist.

☞ There will be a Quarterly Conference of the Advent Christian Association holden at Hesper, Winneshiek County, Iowa, commencing on Friday, 2 o'clock, P. M., Jan. 4th, and continuing over Lord's day.

Notice.

The next quarterly meeting of the Rhode Island State Conference is to be held in Providence, in New Market Hall, Wednesday, Dec. 26th, 1860, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon precisely, the Lord permitting.

A Proposition.

To any one who will send us a new subscriber for one year, we will forward, post paid, a copy of our late discussion with Eld. W. W. Clayton, on the conscious state of the spirit after death, and the destruction of the wicked. And for a new subscriber for six months, we will send a copy of the pamphlets on "Soul" and "Spirit." With a little effort, a thousand names may be added to our list. Let every reader try to aid in scattering the light and truth. Now is the time to work.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brn. that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday Morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

Meetings in Concord, N. H., are to continue every evening from Dec. 17th over the following Lord's day. MILES GRANT.

The Day of the Lord.

BY CHARLES KINGSLEY.

The day of the Lord is at hand, at hand,
The storms roll up the sky;
A nation sleeps starving on heaps of gold,
All dreamers toss and sigh.
When the pain is the sorest, the child is born,
And the day is darkest before the morn
Of the day of the Lord at hand.

Gather you, gather you, angels of God,
Chivalry, Justice, and Truth:
Come, for the earth is grown coward and old;
Come down, and renew us her youth!
Freedom, Self-sacrifice, Mercy and Love,
Haste to the battle-field—stoop from above,
To the day of the Lord, at hand.

Gather you, gather you, hounds of hell—
Famine, and Plague, and War;
Idleness, Bigotry, Cant and Misrule,
Gather—and fall in the snare.
Hirelings and Mammonites, Pedants and Knaves,
Crawl to the battle or sneak to your graves,
In the day of the Lord at hand.

Who would sit down and whine for a lost age of gold
While the Lord of all ages is here?
True hearts will leap up at the trumpet of God,
And those who can suffer can dare.
Each past age of gold was an iron age too,
And the meekest of saints may find stern work to do
In the day of the Lord at hand.

[The writer of the above probably does not hold the personal return of Christ. But, though the form of his opinion is different, the substance of the poem is pretty strong Advent doctrine. And many who are not Adventists are of much the same way of thinking.—C. F. H.]

"The Coming Storm."

Under the above heading, we find the following, in an English periodical called "The last Viols." The writer is a close observer of the signs of the times. Although we may differ with him on some points, his remarks deserve a careful perusal. He says:—

"It is the comfortable opinion of Protestant interpreters, that every bad character in Scripture is a type of the Pope, and that every judgment in the book of Revelation, except the first two or three, is levelled against Popery. The horrid crimes, the endless wars, the vile avarice, the dire hypocrisy, the worship of money, the Indian massacres—all these enormities—are meekly passed over, as if God were a corrupt judge. He is supposed to direct all his judgments against the church of Rome, while the crimes of Protestantism are passed by without even a censure or a hint. "Thou thoughtest wickedly that I am even such an one as thyself," may, surely, be the reply of Him who is judge of ALL the earth. And it is to be wondered at how men who are called Ministers of the gospel can be guilty of such perversion of all truth! There is not one church of christendom that is not comprehended within the range of the book of Revelation, and of the last judgments. Every church is more or less APOSTATE, and in proportion to its apostasy will fall under the judgments. Rome is the most guilty; she is the mother of harlots, the fountain-head of the evil; and, therefore, the seven-hilled city is made the representative of all. When apostasy is personified—when it is embodied in one person—the Roman pontiff is the personification, because he stands at the fountain-head of the apostasy; but let it never be forgotten that Rome is NOT spoken of ALONE! She is not simply called the "harlot," but the "mother of harlots!" And are the daughters to escape, and the mother only to be judged? If the children are partakers of the sin they must be partakers of the judgment. The daughters are described precisely in the same terms as the mother. All are equally described as "harlots:" and will you allow Mr. Elliott or Dr. Cumming to deceive you by telling you that Popery alone is the object of prophetic threatening while the harlots of which she is the mother are to escape with impunity? Be assured that the Judge of all the earth will do right in your days as much as in the days of Abraham and Sodom and Gomorrah, which WE call the churches of Christendom! The saints who are shut up within the system will be delivered; but the churches and church system will be deservedly destroyed. To those who flatter the Protestant church in its enormous crimes—who call it the spiritual Zion while it is little better than a spiritual Sodom—to such publications as our religious periodicals,—to our Protestant interpreters, we would recommend a careful study of the words of Elihu: "I know not to give flattering titles. Let me not accept any man's person; neither let me give flattering titles unto man."

We believe, and feel almost certain, that the destruction of the "Woman," in the 17th of Revelation, will extend far beyond the limits of the church of Rome, and will embrace every church of Christendom. The whole fabric of church government will be broken up, and the spiritual Sodom, like its ancient prototype, will be "burned with fire." A literal fire will fall upon the external wealth, and a figurative fire on the ecclesiastical systems of apostate Protestantism. Those who give flattering titles have ventured to interpret the 144,000, the Elect of the elect, as the symbols of Protestantism. But all who prefer truth to popularity reject such an interpretation with abhorrence. Look round on the Protestant world—on its love of money, its fawning upon the great, its sacrifice of conscience to worldly interest, and of principle to expediency, its dead, unmeaning formalism, its mockery of the Holy Ghost, by asserting that he is given where he is not given; and can you doubt that destruction will overtake such a church? Look on the Orangemen of Ireland, who go out armed with deadly weapons to insult the Roman Catholics, and then to KILL them if they dare resent the insult! Are not such men worse than the Roman Catholics themselves? Are such men the "salt of the earth,"—the 144,000,—the Elect of the elect? Flattery itself cannot dare to say it. We believe that all the churches of Christendom are corrupt, and that the beast and his ten horns will pour out God's vengeance upon all. The woman of the seven hills, as the most guilty, will be the most severely judged; her daughters, as one degree less guilty, will be less severely dealt with; the saints, who are now enveloped by those false systems, will be delivered; but the systems themselves, as utterly worn out, will be destroyed for ever. And what shall take their place? The kingdom of God; the personal presence of the King of Glory; the religion of SIGHT in place of the religion of FAITH. Faith gathers out the elect as the bride of the Lamb; but faith was never intended as the religion of the world. The only religion for the world is that of SIGHT; as the only religion for gathering out the elect is that of faith.

The preparations for the coming storm are before our eyes. A storm is coming so wide-spread and so terrible, that it seems inevitably to be the last. The human race, the globe itself, could not endure a second convulsion like the one which is at hand. The revolutions of the atmosphere are symbols of the revolutions of mankind. As if the last vial had been literally poured out upon the air, there has lately been witnessed a new and formidable convulsion of the winds, which is called a Cyclone: a whirlpool wind which moves round on the circumference of some vast circle, and shakes, and tosses, and tears, and overwhelms, whatever comes within its vortex. This phenomenon, in its excess, is so new, and so terrible, that one may fancy it has purposely been created to remind the world that the last vial is at hand—that vial which shall be poured out into the air. Like this dread Cyclone, the "Prince of Air" has matured a moral revolution which is about to shake all the kingdoms of the globe. The circle of this vast revolution embraces the whole of Christendom—the whole Mohammedan world—the Roman empire—and the prophetic earth. It embraces the Atlantic, the Eastern Ocean, and the waters of China. The Mohammedan races, in a frenzy of fanaticism, have conspired for the extermination of the Giaours; the struggle has already begun amidst the mountains of Lebanon; the Holy Land and Jerusalem are placed in the very centre of this oriental Cyclone; the dust of ages is swept away by the whirlwind; and the temple, so long buried in the sands, is about to be disclosed. When the whirlwind has done its work, the way will be open for the return of the Jews, and the restoration of the Jewish rites.

While the convulsion has begun in the East, it still is delayed in the West; but once it begins, it will be the fiercest storm that has ever blown. There is no longer any doubt that reaction and revolution are both actively employed in marshalling their forces for one great decisive conflict. The whole of Europe is the seat of war; and absolutism and democracy are the hostile powers. The Italian war of 1859 has given the signal for action. The veil has been lifted, and underneath, the seething mass of furious democratic passions is discovered ready to explode and devastate society. Austria, Prussia, Russia, and the absolutist powers of Europe, are now forming a coalition on the plan of the Holy Alliance of 1815. They are uniting for one grand effort to crush down the people, and to force them back into the abject slavery of the last forty years. The people fought for their sovereigns, and shed their best blood to overthrow the first Napoleon, in order to rescue their own princes from the yoke of France. No sooner had the victory been gained, than the European sovereigns, with the darkest perfidy, turned round upon the very men by whose blood the victory had been won, and forced them back under a weight of bondage more heavy than before. The Holy Alliance established a tyranny so monstrous, betrayed a spirit so perfidious, that language cannot express its enormity. And so, for forty years, the burning passions of slavery, with all its agonies, and with all its sighs, were smothered in the subterranean caverns of despotism. In those dreadful dungeons the noblest men lingered, rotted, and died away, while perfidy glittered and revelled in the air and sunshine of heaven!

The despairing people turned to England for help, and she invariably deserted them; they received underhand encouragement from Lord Palmerston, and he betrayed them; the land of freedom became the cold-hearted friend who gives empty words, and denies all self-sacrificing help;—when, suddenly, from the very ashes of the man whom the nations had beaten down, the AVENGER of the NATIONS arose. "Verily there is a God that judgeth the earth." Retribution has come at last, and the vengeance inflicted on the First Napoleon is to be avenged by the Third. While he avenges his predecessor, the Third Napoleon, equally avenges the wrongs and miseries of the nations. With profound skill he—himself a despot—has identified his own cause with the cause of universal freedom. An absolutist at home, he has become a democrat abroad; and being elected to the empire by universal suffrage, he occupies a despotic throne as the representative of popular liberty. By a combination that seems almost supernatural, he is at once the incarnation of absolutism and the incarnation of democracy. That ONE man has become the centre of all the factions of the world—the pivot on which all the masses of mankind move—the blood-red sun around whom a thousand blood-red stars revolve. On him the eyes of all the democracy of Europe are fixed; and men only await his signal to rise in arms over the whole of Christendom.

Such is the wondrous position of affairs. One man, with an uncontrollable power, pondering in his mind a thousand gloomy things; with dauntless courage, and a will as firm as adamant; possessed of that hardness of look which no eye can penetrate, and skilled in those "dark sayings" which no one can explain—an exact impersonation of Daniel's prophetic King; with an army the most numerous and best trained for war that ever yet obeyed any single mind; with an immense navy; with allies extending from the Northern Seas to Mount Atlas, and from Cape Finisterre to the Euphrates and the Red Sea—this man, holding in his hand all the materials of action, has drawn over to his side the whole democracy of the world, and has become the virtual sovereign of one hundred millions of men;—men, furious for revenge, maddened by oppression, weary of life, armed and trained for war, impatient for the conflict, and thirsting for revenge or for blood. Opposed to this one man, and to this enormous revolution, are the kings and princes of Europe,—languid, enervated, and half worn out; fatigued by habitual luxury, and with all the inherited diseases which attend upon long-established dynasties; but with powerful armies, in which fear and discipline supply the place of loyalty and zeal; a many-headed and stubborn absolutism opposed to a single-headed and fiery democracy. We may estimate the violence of the shock by the massive proportions of the hostile bodies.

As if to exaggerate the fury of this vast conflict, the very powers of darkness themselves seem to have visited the earth to inspire our engineers, and to work in our arsenals. The invention of implements of war, both offensive and defensive, exceeds all that history has recorded in any former age. The use of the bayonet has been improved into a science; the musket superseded by the rifle; the ordinary cannon, terrible as it seemed, has become a mere toy in comparison with the newly-discovered ordnance; destruction, once satisfied with a range of two or three miles, now disdains such limits, and vomits out its fiery breath to a distance of three leagues; offensive armor, once applied to men, has been now applied to ships: and in place of mail-clad warriors of the land, we shall soon have the mail-clad warriors of the deep—the leviathan of the book of Job—mounted with enormous guns, and armed with ponderous spears, bearing with them a thousand men with the speed of a war-horse, and hurling whole navies to destruction. The encounters of the days of chivalry will be repeated on a scale of the most gigantic magnitude. The single knight and his single war-horse will be multiplied into a thousand warriors borne along by a thousand horse-power! Such will be the accessories of that great day in which Almighty God shall proclaim war in the council chamber of heaven against the human race—in which the King of kings shall declare war against the kings of the earth, and of the whole world. When kings go forth to war they recall their ambassadors; and when the King of kings is going forth to war, he also will recall HIS ambassador. He will withdraw the church from the earth, and the Spirit of God along with it, and that withdrawal will be a formal DECLARATION OF WAR. The great war of Almighty God must, of necessity, exceed in grandeur every war that has hitherto been waged under heaven. It must exceed all other wars, both in its terrors and its destruction. And the Scriptures tell us that it must be extremely rapid. It is to effect these purposes that Satan has been permitted to visit the earth, and to inspire men with superhuman ingenuity. For these purposes such tremendous implements of war have been invented, and have been hurried on to maturity with more than mortal speed. Scarce has a new instrument of death been announced, but it is brought to perfection; scarce is it brought to perfection, but it is superseded by another, still more deadly; until the mind, fatigued by such tremendous novelty, looks forward to the time when a single battle, or even a single volley, will decide the strife forever, by laying low one half of mankind in their conflict with the other half. "Alas! who shall live when God doeth this?" said the prophet, in contemplation of the last great scene. "Woe to the inhabiters of the earth," (said another prophet) "for the devil is come down unto you, having great wrath." All the confusion, the preparation, and the uproar of the world, are the work of ONE MAN, and take their rise from one mysterious mind. Can we doubt that such a man has some dangerous mission, some deep apostasy at heart? His object, for the present, is to play off the Pope against Italy, and Italy against the Pope, until he shall have driven on both to their ruin. His more remote object and his unsuspected mission is to supersede Popery, and to set up himself as the centre—not only of the policy, but—of the religion of the world: and as money and sensual pleasure are now the only deities that are worshiped throughout Christendom, it will require but a feeble revolution to convert the ABSTRACT into the CONCRETE, and to substitute the dispenser of prosperity, as an object of worship, in place of prosperity itself; to change the idolatry of a SYSTEM into the idolatry of a MAN. When that man shall overturn the Pope, let no false prophet induce you to misintrepet his character, or to worship him as the champion of truth, for he will then become the chief of antichristianism.

Write Often.

Write to me very often,
Write to me very soon—
Letters to me are dearer
Than loveliest flowers in June;
They are affection's torches,
Lighting of friendship's lamp,
Flitting around the heart-strings
Like fire-flies in the damp.

Write to me very often,
Write in the joyous morn,
Or at the close of evening,
When all the day is gone.
Then, while the stars are beaming
Bright on the azure sky,
When through the fading forest
Cold the wild winds sigh,
Draw up thy little table
Close to the fire, and write.
Write to me soon in the morning,
Or write to me late at night.

Write to me very often;
Letters are links that bind
Truthful hearts to each other,
Fettering mind to mind,
Giving to kindly spirits
Lasting and true delight.
If ye would strengthen friendship,
Never forget to write!

For the Crisis.

Baptism.

Is water baptism essential to salvation? I answer, yes. Proof. In Peter 3: 20, we read that eight souls were saved by water. 21st.—"The like figure whereunto baptism doth also now save us." This must mean water. Again, Rom. 6: 4.—"Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life." This also is water. Again, Col. 2: 12,—"Buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him up from the dead." This must certainly mean water, and the resurrection is from a watery grave: like as Christ could have had no life only by the resurrection, so we must have perished in our baptism had we not have been raised from the watery grave. Col. 3: 1.—"If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth at the right hand of God."

A dear good sister in Ohio, who was baptized several years ago by Bro. Grant, but did not understand the nature and design of it until a few weeks ago, was not satisfied with her former baptism, and I with others advised her to go forward again; and last Wednesday we had a meeting at her house, and repaired to the pond, cut a hole in the ice, and Bro. Blanchard buried her with Christ. The glory came while she was under the water, and when she came out she let it be known. Now if there are others that have not a clear conscience, let them go and do likewise, and thus show your faith by your works. Do every duty, and may the God of peace keep your heart and mind unto the coming of the Lord. Amen.

Selections.

Reality in Religion.

You have had enough of thoughts: you seek for things. You have wearied your soul with speculations about things divine. You seek the divine things themselves. Long trains of religious ratiocination; full schemes of religious doctrine; the tracking and tracing of the mutual connections of truth with truth; their cross-lights, and side-lights, and harmonies;—in all this, perhaps, you are no mean proficient. And considering that the fall—while it has removed all spiritual light from man's mind, and all spiritual love from his heart—has left all the constituting elements of rationality and responsibility, it is not amazing if even the natural man be found capable of great proficiency, in reasoning on the statements of divine revelation, and constructing well-ordered schemes of doctrine from its contents.

For, let us bear in mind what it is, precisely, that the natural man is disqualified for. "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned," (1 Cor. 2: 24.) "They are the things" of the Spirit of God which he cannot receive; which he cannot know; which are foolish to him;—very discernible, but not by him; very real in themselves, but not to his apprehension. It is not said that he cannot reason concerning divine things.

What is it, that eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, and that hath not entered into the heart of man? It is the things which God hath prepared for them that love him, (1 Cor. 2: 9.) What is it that the Spirit searcheth and revealeth? The deep things of God, (ver. 10.) What is it that no man knoweth save the Spirit of God, and he to whom the Spirit unveils them? Again the things of God. The things of God knoweth no man but the Spirit of God, (ver. 11.) For what end is it that we receive, not the spirit of the world, but the Spirit which is of God? That we might know the things that are freely given us of God, (ver. 12.) And what is it that the very doctrine—the speech of inspired men—envelops and contains, rendering it imperative that their speech be inspired indeed; for otherwise why should it carry such contents? Again, the answer is, the things of God. "Which things also we speak not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth"—the divine wine would burst such bottles of man's construction—"but in the words which the Holy Ghost teacheth," (ver. 13.)

The things of God: the deep things of God: the things of the Spirit of God! Such is the Apostle's language most persistently.

And is such emphatic phraseology not full of meaning?—more especially when thus so carefully repeated, when thus so continually clung to? Doubtless it is. And it fastens down our attention on the precise nature of that inability which the Apostle then goes on (ver. 14,) to predicate of the natural man; namely this—that however much, and logically, and with perfect accuracy, you may reason about divine doctrines, you cannot, without the Spirit, receive nor discern,—you can neither grasp nor see,—divine things.

The doctrine of forgiveness, we shall say; who can tell how profoundly you may study it; how acutely you may argue it; how clearly you may teach it; how instructive to others your statement and exposition of it may be? Forgiveness—as a topic of speculation—may be one among the thoughts of your mind; and, in this light, even as a natural man, you may possibly do great justice to the theme. But forgiveness as a privilege—actual and real forgiveness; forgiveness to be actual and real must be not one of the thoughts of your spirit, but one of the thoughts of God's Spirit; one of those thoughts of peace and not of evil which he knoweth, that he thinks concerning you, (Jer. 29: 11;) the thoughts of God, not transient and inefficient like your thoughts, but substantial, effectual, eternal; the thoughts of God, which in their self-realizing substantiality are worthy to be called "the things" of God. Forgiveness to be real must be one of these things of the Spirit of God; and, in that view, without God's Spirit you cannot discern it. As a mere thought, or doctrine, or scheme of thought, in your mind, it is altogether unreal; an abstraction; a shadowy, unsubstantial, airy nothing. Scanned and studied to eternity it would leave you unforgiven still. As one of the things of God—real, and that may be grasped and held fast—you are forgiven when you see it and receive it.

Adoption, in like manner, you may deal with, merely as a doctrine, giving it a lodgment among your thoughts. And you may master all detail and bearings. But still it may remain to you unreal. As an actual reality, as an act of God's free grace; a real transaction, conferring real privilege and pleadable right; it is among the things of God—those things which the natural man receiveth not, neither can he know them.

Ah! it is this dealing with divine doctrines, to the exclusion of the divine things which the faithfulness of God has enshrined in them, that leaves so many with a religion destitute of the element of reality; and destitute, therefore, of power and comfort and refreshment.—Christ's Presence in the Gospel History.

Confidence in God.

In an old brown cottage lived a solitary woman known from village to village as "Happy Nancy." She had no money, no family, no relations, and was half blind, quite lame, and very crooked. True, there was no comeliness in her, yet even so the King of kings had set on her his royal seal.

"Well, Nancy, singing again," the visitor would say as he stopped at her door.

"O yes, I'm for ever at it."

"I wish you'd tell me your secret, Nancy; you are all alone, you work hard, you have nothing very pleasant around you—what is the reason you're so happy?"

"Perhaps it's because I have n't got any body but God," replied she, looking up. "You see, rich folks like you depend upon their families and their houses; they've got to think of their business, of their wives and children, and then they're mighty afraid of troubles ahead. I a'nt got any thing to trouble myself about, you see, 'cause I leave it all to the Lord. I think, well, if he can keep this great world in good order, the sun rolling day after day, the stars a shining night after night, make my garden things come up the same, season after season, He can certainly take care of poor me; and so I leave all to God, and the Lord takes care of me."

"Well, but, Nancy, suppose a frost should come after your fruit-trees are in blossom, and your little plants out; suppose—"

"But I don't suppose; I never can suppose; I don't want to suppose, except that the Lord will do every thing right. That's what makes you people unhappy; you're all the time supposing. Now, why can't you wait till the suppose comes, as I do, and then make the best of it?"

"Ah, Nancy, it's pretty certain you'll go to heaven, while many of us, with our worldly wisdom, will have to stay out."

"There, you're at it again," said Nancy, shaking her head; "always looking out for some black cloud. Why, if I was you, I'd keep the devil at arm's length, instead of taking him right into my heart; he'll do you a desperate sight of mischief."

Depend upon it, earth would seem an Eden to us if, like Happy Nancy, we cast our care on God.—Amer. Messenger.

Dead yet Living.

The cedar is most useful when dead. It is the most productive when its place knows it no more. There is no timber like it. Firm in the grain, and capable of the finest polish, the tooth of no insect will touch it, and Time himself can hardly destroy it. Diffusing a perpetual fragrance through the chambers which it ceils, the worm will not corrode the book which it protects, nor the moth corrupt the garment which it guards; all but immortal itself, it transfuses its amaranthine qualities to the objects around it. Every christian is useful in his life, but the goodly cedars are the most useful afterwards. Luther is dead, but the Reformation lives. Knox, Melville, and Henderson are dead, but Scotland still retains a Sabbath and a Christian peasantry, a Bible in every house, and a school in every parish. Bunyan is dead, but his bright spirit still walks the earth in its "Pilgrim's Progress." Baxter is dead, but souls are still quickened by the "Saints' Rest." Cowper is dead, but the "golden apples" are still as fresh as when newly gathered in the "silver basket" of the Olney Hymns. Elliot is dead, but the missionary enterprise is young. Henry Martyn is dead, but who can count the apostolic spirits who, phœnix-like, have started from the funeral-pile? Howard is dead, but modern philanthropy is only commencing its career. Raikes is dead, but the Sabbath-schools go on.—Rev. J. Hamilton.

THE SIMPLICITY OF GREATNESS.—Many years ago the licentiates of Princeton Seminary were in the habit of preaching at a station some distance from that place. Among their habitual hearers was a sincere and humble, but uneducated christian slave, called Uncle Sam, who on his return home would try to tell his mistress what he could remember of the sermon, but complained that the students were too deep and learned for him. One day, however, he came home in great good humor, saying that a poor unlart old man, just like himself, had preached that day, who he supposed was hardly fit to preach to the white peeple; but he was glad he came for his sake, for he could remember every thing he had said. On inquiry, it was found that Uncle Sam's "unlart" old preacher was Rev. Dr. Archibald Alexander, who, when he heard the criticism, said it was the highest compliment ever paid to his preaching.

PREACHING.—A writer in the London Patriot who had heard four sermons by four ministers of as many denominations, gives his opinion of their style. One was quite extempore, another was repeated from memory, the third was read, and the fourth was evidently well studied, and was founded on notes frequently referred to. He says: "My speculation on the practical results of each would be, that the effect of the first, though lively, was evanescent; that of the second, to leave a high opinion of the preacher's ability; that of the third, to create a desire to see the discourse in print; that of the fourth, like bread cast upon the waters, to be seen after many days."

Reading for Youth.

A Willing Servant.

Dr. Morrison was a distinguished missionary in China. As his labor was great, and almost too much for one man, for he translated the whole Bible into Chinese, he sent home to the Society in England to send out a young missionary to help him. When they got his letter, they set to work to inquire among their friends for the right kind of a young man to go out to China as a missionary to help Dr. Morrison. After a while, a young man, from the country—a pious young man, who loved Jesus Christ—came and offered himself. He was poor, had poor clothes on, and looked like a countryman, rough and unpolished. He was introduced to the gentlemen of the Society, and had a talk with them. They then said he might go out of the room, till they consulted with each about him. When his back was turned, they said they were afraid the young man would never do to help Dr. Morrison; that it would not do to send him as a missionary, as he was but a rough countryman. Finally they said to one of their number, Dr. Philips, "Doctor, you go out and tell the young man that the gentlemen did not think him fit to be a missionary; but if he would like to go out as a servant to a missionary, we will send him."

The doctor did not quite like to do it; but he told the young man they thought he had not education enough, and lacked a great many other things necessary to a missionary; but if he would go as a servant, they would send him out. A great many young men would have said, "No; I don't do any such thing; if I can't go as a missionary I won't go at all; you don't catch me going out as anybody's servant." But no, he did not say so. He quietly said, "quietly said, "Very well, sir, if they do not think me fit to be a missionary, I will go as a servant. I am willing to be a hewer of wood or drawer of water, or do any thing to advance the cause of my heavenly Master."

He was sent as a servant. But he did not stay one. After a while, he got to do what he longed to do, to preach the Gospel; and he became the Rev. Dr. Milne, one of the best and greatest missionaries that ever went to any country.

What a beautiful lesson of humility is this to children!—Ex.

The Two Bears.

There was a great outcry in the nursery, which much disturbed Uncle Jem, reading his morning paper. "Those children are always at it," muttered Uncle Jem, knitting his shaggy brows, and looking, perhaps, not so cross as worried. In fact, he was not used to children, and, therefore, their little squabbles and differences troubled him. He forgot that little brooks did not always run smooth—they would dash and splash over the pebbles. By and by, as the noise did not hush, Uncle Jem threw down his paper and rushed up stairs. "Children," he cried, "do you know there must be a couple of bears in the nursery?" "No, there a'n't," said they, each one at a surprised stand still, "no bears here." "I say there must be," cried Uncle Jem with determination; "I shall have a couple of bears put in here, chained in."

Little Emily bobbed down behind the bed—Maurice dodged into the closet—Johnny held tighter to his whip, but George stood up with a protecting look, as much as to say, I'll guard the flock, sir. Uncle Jem faced the children, and the children faced Uncle Jem. For a moment or two no word was spoken; the nursery was never stiller. Perhaps the children were thinking of the pains of being craunched, for Maurice asked in a little frightened voice, from the closet, "Bears to eat us up, Uncle?" "I hope they will eat you up," said Uncle Jem, "every one of you." This savage wish was almost too much for them. "I'll tell mother," said Emily, turning quite pale, and almost ready to cry. "I'll whip the bears off," cried Johnny, rallying his courage and snapping his whip. "Is that the way you would treat your children, Uncle?" asked George; "the Bible says you must do as you would be done by."

"Yes," persisted Uncle Jem, "I shall always keep two bears in my nursery." Uncle Jem did not then know, as he had no nursery, how much more easily this was said than done. "Two bears—two bears, boys; two bears, girls!" he repeated. "Bear and forbear, these are their names," he added, smiling.

Ah, those good, gracious bears that eat you up with kindness. Happy is the nursery which has them.—Child's Paper.

Christ and the Little Ones.

"The Master has come over Jordan,"
Said Hannah, the mother, one day,
"He is healing the people who throng him
With a touch of his finger, they say.

"And now I shall carry the children—
Little Rachel, and Samuel, and John—
I shall carry the baby, Esther,
For the Lord to look upon."

The father looked at her kindly,
But he shook his head and smiled:
"Now who but a doting mother
Would think of a thing so wild?

"If the children were tortured by demons,
Or dying of fever—'t were well—
Or had they the taint of the leper,
Like many in Israel;"—

"Nay, do not hinder me, Nathan,
I feel such a burden of care,—
If I carry it to the Master,
Perhaps I shall leave it there.

"If He lay his hand on the children,
My heart will be lighter, I know,
For a blessing forever and ever
Will follow them as they go."

So over the hills of Judah,
Along by the vine-rows green,
With Esther asleep on her bosom,
And Rachel her brothers between;

'Mong the people who hung on his teaching,
Or waited his touch and his word,
Through the row of proud Pharisees listening,
She pressed to the feet of the Lord.

"Now, why shouldst thou hinder the Master,"
Said Peter, "with children like these?
Seest not how, from morning till evening,
He teacheth and healeth disease?"

Then Christ said, "Forbid not the children,
Permit them to come unto me."
And he took in his arms little Esther,
And Rachel he set on his knee;

And the heavy heart of the mother
Was lifted all earth's care above,
As he laid his hands on the brothers,
And blessed them with the tenderest love;

As he said of the babes in his bosom,
"Of such are the kingdom of heaven"—
And strength for all duty and trial,
That hour to her spirit was given.

—Little Pilgrim.

Telling the Lord.

As a mother comforteth her child, so the Lord comforteth them that fear him. Did you ever think, dear child, what a beautiful promise this is? Doubtless most of the readers of the Instructor know by blest experience what it is to be comforted by their mothers—know how ready and willing she is to sympathize with them in all their griefs.

I heard of a little girl who was saying, "Our Father," kneeling by her mother's side, when she came to "forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors," she suddenly stopped and burst into tears. Her mother tenderly inquired the reason. She said she could not say that—she couldn't forgive that little girl who broke her beautiful dolly's face. "Well," said the mother, "God can help you, my child; I'll ask him." And as soon as the mother closed her fervent petition that her little girl might have grace to forgive, the child looked up and smiled, clasping her little hands together slowly and solemnly finished her prayer, commencing with "forgive," and she was comforted.

Now, dear children, if you ever feel unhappy concerning the treatment of your playmates, instead of cherishing angry, resentful feelings, and saying bad, naughty words to those around you, get into the habit of telling the Lord about it, and ask him to help you to forgive even as you want to be forgiven. Little children are not apt to keep their troubles to themselves if they have a kind, sympathetic mother. Neither let us who are older, when we have such a kind Father in heaven, who has promised to comfort us as a mother comforteth her child.—Youth's Instructor.

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,
Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months	15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for three months for 50 cents, which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of brethren, they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Adversity Conquered.

BY MISS S. P. YOUNG.

Be patient, be hopeful,
Though storms strew your path,
Though the heavens should frown
In darkness and wrath;
Though the hopes that are brightest
The soonest decay,
Yet remember 't is darkest
The nearest to day.

Be patient, be hopeful,
Though tyrants should frown,
And despots should trample
Thy liberties down;
Though trials surround thee,
Cast aside all fear,
When darkness is deepest
The daylight is near.

Be patient, be hopeful,
Though hopes have all fled;
Though friends who were truest
Repose with the dead;
Though pain, grief and sorrow
Should in triumph prevail,
Mourn not, nor upbraid not,
Nor let thy heart fail.

The waves that are sparkling
In beauty so bright,
Rolled o'er the dark billows
And surged them in light;
Hope's sun is uprising,
The night is nigh gone,
Be patient, be hopeful,
The daylight will dawn.

God Complains.

Of what? Of the ignorance of his professed children. But is he not able to impart wisdom and knowledge? Yea, verily. Why then complain of those who lack wisdom? Because he hath provided the means adequate, and given us, if you please, the modus operandi by which we may secure this treasure. What if an individual manifests regret because his family are in indigent circumstances, when he has been assured that by a laborious application he may secure for them everything desirable, but through indolence he neglects; would not all consider him highly culpable? Just so in the case before us. God would not complain had he not furnished ample means of knowledge to his children. It is then their careless indolence which he deprecates. Like Esau, they appreciate things of less moment to be more consequential.

In the days of Isaiah, God complains bitterly of the imbecility of that once noble being whom he had formed with sufficient intellectual endowment to have "dominion" over the workmanship of his hands. So deteriorated are his professed children at this time that he actually gives the preference to the beasts of the field and the fowls of heaven.—Isa. 1 : 3; Jer. 2 : 7. The ox knoweth his owner, and that most stupid of all beasts knoweth the place from whence cometh his necessary food; but God complaineth that those who profess to love him are even below this, in point of knowledge. Though pining and languishing for want of spiritual food, they have forgotten their Master, and the place whither to repair to obtain this food.

God complains that his children do not know him; though several years must have expired since their birth, they do not know their Father! Supposing at the expiration of six, eight or ten years from the birth of a child, it is truthfully reported that that child does not know his father; what would be the conclusion arrived at? I think one of the three following reasons would be immediately assigned: either some VERY GREAT CHANGE must have come over the father, or the child must have been bereft of reason, or there had been a long, LONG separation of the two.

Now as to the first, we are assured from high authority that in our heavenly Father "there is no variableness neither shadow of turning"; "He is the same yesterday, to-day and forever"; consequently this cannot be the reason why his children have forgotten him. But the second reason may be the one, that is, they may have allowed sin to so becloud the horizon of their mind as to induce spiritual idiocy, or, to use a scriptural phrase, have caused them to become "sottish," and thus they have become estranged. So long have they been separated they have forgotten his sweet voice and follow the voice of a stranger. They scarce dare use the loving epithet of "my Father," though in their infancy he caressed them lovingly, and provided means to meet their expenses at the bank of heaven, and beside, he whispered sweet promises in their ears of a rich patrimony with his own Son, giving them at the same time something to help them through this waste, howling wilderness, called by Paul, "earnest money," or the "earnest of our inheritance." But yet they were sufficiently foolish to allow a few earthly pebbles to separate them from this friend so emphatically above all others.

They do not recollect what their Father has told them about his person or his attributes. When he has repeated again and again that his Son Jesus Christ is the express image of his Father's PERSON, they boldly affirm God hath no person.—Heb 1 : 3; Col. 1 : 15; Phil. 2 : 6; 2 Cor. 4 : 4. And when he informs them that he has a location, a dwelling place for his person, they are "sottish" enough to declare he is everywhere and nowhere in particular.—2 Chron. 30 : 27; Ps. 68 : 5; 1 Kings 8 : 30, 39, 43, 49. Thus when Jesus Christ affirms that he LEFT the Father to come into the world," he left everywhere to come into the world, thus proving this world to be nowhere. Well, when he again asserts that he "left this world to go to the Father," they make him say that he left everywhere to go nowhere! O my Father, I wonder not that thou hast denominated such as "sottish"! But there is a divine emanation which God hath sent forth from himself into the world which is ubiquitious, so that if we fly to the uttermost "part of the earth," we shall find it present to reprove and comfort. God says "he has given a portion of it to every man to profit withal"; but do not let us be sufficiently "sottish" to affirm this to be all the God there is. God's Spirit is something he himself pours out; hence it is not a person. It cannot be seen though the influences can be felt, but God can, and he has promised that the pure in heart shall see him. And then he speaks of his attributes as being love and mercy, showing in his word he will do the best that love and mercy can do, even for his enemies. If they will not serve him, he declares he will put them out of the way; that is, he will consume them into smoke and ashes, and cause them to be in the same situation as though they had never existed.—Ps. 37 : 20; Mal. 4 : 1; Oba. 16; and a hundred more on the same point may be quoted from the law of God.

Again, God complains by the prophet Jeremiah, relative to the birds of heaven, possessing superior understanding of the "times and seasons" to his children. Hear him: "Yea, the stork in the heaven knoweth her appointed times; and the turtle and the crane and the swallow observe the time of their coming; but my people know not the judgment of the Lord." Also in the days of Christ he accuses the professed church of the same thing. He told them they observed the signs in the sky, and thus made their calculations accordingly, but they were too dull of comprehension in spiritual things to understand the signs of that present time. Though they professed a great deal of religion, outwardly appearing very godly, he who knew what was in their hearts calls them hypocrites. "He answered and said unto them, When it is evening, ye say, it will be fair weather; for the sky is red. And in the morning, it will be foul weather to-day: for the sky is red and lowering. O ye hypocrites, ye can discern the face of the sky; but can ye not discern the signs of the times?" If they would have given heed to the teachings of God, their beautiful city might have been spared; but because of their willful blindness relative to the "signs of the times" this beautiful structure was laid waste. "For the days shall come upon thee, that thine enemies shall cast a trench about thee, and compass thee round, and keep thee in on every side. And shall lay thee even with the ground, and thy children within thee: and they shall not leave in thee one stone upon another: because thou knewest not the time of thy visitation."

If this great Teacher gave such sharp reproof to the professed church of God for not understanding the signs of the times at his first coming, if they pretended that the prophecies relating to Christ's first coming, thirty-two in number, and all having a literal fulfillment before their eyes, were too intricate to be understood, what will he say to his professed church at his second coming, that have seen all the moral and physical signs so faithfully delineated in the Word of God, fulfilled before their eyes? The multifarious chains of Daniel and John's prophecies, together with the Savior's predictions of the signs in the sun and in the moon and stars, and also the moral condition of the world by two striking precedents—the days of Noah, and the days of Lot! and also the moral state of the professed church given by an inspired apostle in his second letter to Timothy, third chap.; after having all this before their eyes, will a plea of ignorance exculpate them? Have they reason to expect more lenient language will be addressed to them than to those who did the same things eighteen hundred years ago? Nay, verily. God's ways are equal. Then let us search the Word of God faithfully—yea, as for hid treasures, for by that we shall be judged at the last day.

But we should notice in all these complaints of God, it is not a deficiency of brain, a lack of intellect which he deprecates, but a perversion of that intellect. In Jer. 4 : 22, where God accuses his professed children of being so foolish and sottish as not to know their Father, he adds these words of reprehension: "They are wise to do evil, but to do good they have no knowledge." Perhaps they can devise some deep schemes to annoy the faithful ones the unconverted never would have dreamed of. Like Judas they know the place. Perhaps they possess sufficient skill to plan and execute the most complicated piece of mechanism, and form multitudinous plans for self-emolument and aggrandizement, exerting at the same time every physical nerve and sinew for the accomplishment of the same. But the plan of salvation wrought out by Jesus Christ and lucidly described in the Sacred Volume is to them wholly incomprehensible! Again, they may possess attractive conversational talents, and pride themselves on being able to entertain at the levee or soiree, or certainly to contribute their part at the common convivial party; but when at the humble and social prayer meeting (if indeed they be found there) they have no talent to speak a word of encouragement to that weak youth who may have just entered his name on the list with those who are running for an incorruptible prize; nor even to inform of their own spiritual whereabouts. Should we marvel if God impute folly and sottishness to such? It does not call for infinite power to descry the spiritual condition of such.

But is there no help to relieve from this sad dilemma? No power to extricate from this sad, deep pit? Yes! Give ear, oh ye heavens, and be astonished, oh ye earth! The Eternal himself sues for a renewal of the acquaintanceship! He informs us that his bowels of compassion yet yearn over such. He exhorts them with the language of tenderness to awake and cast off this worldly policy and listen to his words, and he will yet be a Father unto them and love them freely. B. MATHEWSON.

The Fourth Beatitude.

"Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled."

'Tis worthy of our highest admiration, that none of the sayings of our blessed Savior, necessary for our salvation, are hidden or mysterious, dark or unfathomable, but on the contrary are adapted to every capacity, every situation and circumstance in life. In the glowing description of our Savior, in his ever memorable sermon on the mount, none are more strikingly interesting, or easy to be understood, than those referred to as hungering and thirsting after righteousness, with the sure promise of being filled.

The pain produced by hunger and thirst, with regard to the body, is something with which in a greater or lesser degree all are acquainted, and in order to escape the sensation of uneasiness produced by these cravings, it is necessary that we pay attention to the physical wants of our nature. For instance. If we neglect to administer to the demands of our appetite, we suffer the distress of hunger and thirst, which, if not satiated with food adapted to our relish, will derange the whole system, and disease in some form, will be the inevitable consequence. And in order to secure comfort and harmony in the physical department, this process must be continually carried on without interruption. These facts, however, are so simple and self-evident, that it would appear like time spent in vain, to bring them before the mind, nevertheless, it is sometimes useful and important to remember the day, even of "small things." Individuals, who cannot take their natural food, we at once regard as being sick, or in some measure out of health, and even if no indications of disease are to be discovered in the outward form, yet it is evident that inroads are being made on parts of the system concealed from our view; hence it becomes necessary, in order to restore the system to its usual health and vigor, to resort to some remedy that will have the desired effect. And if we are so fortunate as to regain our health, the greatest of earthly blessings, we feel more than compensated for the pains taken to bring about the happy result. O then, if this clay tenement, which is compared to a flower of the field whose ephemeral existence so quickly passes away, requires so much attention to secure its welfare and happiness, with what care and sanctity should we regard the spirit, of which this body is the receptacle! With what zeal and ardor should we labor to procure the food that alone can satisfy the soul!

But the thought painfully arises, that there are some who have no desire or relish for the spiritual food that may be obtained by all who will apply for it. With emotions of sorrow, we are compelled to say to such, there is no blessing in reversion for them, but on the contrary leanness and barrenness of soul, while here on earth, and in the end "everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and the glory of his power." The promise, then, of being filled with righteousness, is only to those who hunger and thirst after it, while it is just as certain that those who do not hunger and thirst, will go unblest, and consequently unsaved. O sad and fearful result of blinded infatuation, to starve in sight of food, to perish in sight of the remedy! and yet this is the unhappy course of multiplied thousands who are invited to the gospel feast, but who for want of appetite, or relish for spiritual food, refuse to come, and thus perish in their sins.

Behold the contrast! in these who have satisfied their longing souls at the spiritual banquet of love. See them in their native simplicity, dressed in the beauteous robe of redemption, wrought out by the Lamb of Calvary, their hearts through grace subdued and made the temple of the Holy Spirit, the new, blest name of love written on their brow, while faith, the helmet of salvation, environs them round about, and their hope in the dear Redeemer proves as an anchor, sure and steadfast, entering into that within the vail. O! then, if these are the blest, who would not desire to be blest? If these are they who have hungered and thirsted after righteousness, who are so abundantly filled with such almost insupportable fullness; who would not be induced to labor for the same blessings, the same bright prospects, and the same happy fruition in the end that awaits all the faithful? Our Words.

"Speak kindly, for an unkind word
May probe a tender part,
And be a keen-edged knife to pierce
Some tempted, struggling heart."

O the power there is in language, the importance of always using kind expressions! What human heart but welcomes them, yea, the brute creation recognize the vast difference between kind and unkind words.

But what are unkind words? Words of decision are not unkind, for what peace could be enjoyed in a family where parents are undecided? Who could desire the society in later years of those who have not been dealt with in decision while children? who could expect to receive benefits from such, seeing they have never learned to yield to others?

Earnest words are not necessarily unkind. The times in which we live demand earnest language sometimes, as well as an earnest spirit constantly. Words of reproof are not unkind at suitable times. Who so friendly as one who dares, with a christian spirit, reprove for a thoughtless act, an unconsidered habit, which cripples influence? hence David (Ps. 141 : 5) says, "Let the righteous reprove me, it shall be an excellent oil." My heart responds amen. Let the righteous reprove me, let me know I have their watchcare.

But what are unkind words? Go ask the human family at large; go ask that husband who has braved the storms of life till his brow has become furrowed with care, if the relating of that fault to friends by one beloved was not considered unkind, or that reproof for a non-important word in language not quite as affectionate as might have become the one that uttered it, had she considered the numerous trials that had almost confused the brain.

"Speak kindly, there are hours when he
By anxious care is tossed,
And shadows deep lie on his brow,
By business trials crossed."

Go ask that wife, has she ever realized the power of unkind words? Her form is bowed with sickness, care and toil; her cheek pale, with an expression of anxiety. Methinks one can read secret grief, silent suffering, beneath that settled sadness of deportment. Not long since, while visiting, I was thrown into the society of a gentleman, lady and child, who were visiting at the same place. Before leaving home the child was not as well as usual, yet not sufficiently unwell to detain the mother at home. After leaving home the child grew worse, until it was unsafe leaving it alone. The mother watched over it night and day, until apparently she needed being watched over. At this crisis her husband came in one day and seated himself by the side of his wife, with the little one in her lap. A moment's pause. He sternly remarks, "You ought to have remained at home with the child." The noble christian woman made no reply; perhaps only one present observed the large tear start, but as quickly driven back. Had his dignity forbade rendering service, it surely could not have suffered violence by expressions of kindness; had he remarked affectionately, "I am sorry your visit was so nearly spoiled," could she have felt his heart beat in sympathy for her by some kind expression, her burden would have lost full half its weight.

Then there's the orphan. How sad the name even. Once the strong arm of a father was leaned upon; it now affords no protection; it is palsied in death. Once in wanderings, the earnest prayer of a mother followed; but no longer her penetrating gaze scans the winding course, minutely pointing out dangers therein. Deal very gently with the orphan. Speak very kindly to them; the world must, with all its chilling influences, at times present a sad prospect in an hour of temptation; the feet may go astray. Reprove not too severely.

"Speak kindly to the orphan,
Let no harsh tone be heard,
They must sufficiently endure
Without your unkind word."

And then the aged, middle aged, the reckless youth and children,—Jesus died for them all. Perhaps the aged look back upon a life of sin. Sufficient for them is this crushing retrospective view. Comfort them in their declining days,—if possible inspire hope toward God in their hearts,—their sun will soon set.

And children; speak carefully to them; their young hearts are not callous through the deceitfulness of sin; they are very susceptible of impressions, good or bad, false or true. Great is our responsibility towards them, noble is the work of trying to implant holy principles in their tender breasts.

My dear brethren and sisters, suffer the word of exhortation. We know the large amount of misery occasioned by unkind expressions. Shall we not seek, by prayer and watchfulness, to alleviate this suffering as far as in us lies, by never using words that may wound, but on the contrary those that may heal? "But," says one, "I am so tempted sometimes, I can hardly refrain from speaking sharply." Did you ever think the one you spoke so sharply to might be as severely tempted as yourself at the same time? and if no higher state of grace had been attained than what you have attained unto, I fear the provocation would be to anger and not to good works. Let us consider the great lesson taught by our Savior, of sympathy, of self-denial in sacrificing our feelings to others, in healing the wounded, binding the torn, weeping with the weepers. Let us more fully live for God and the creatures of his care. Let us individually, amid the fearful existing apostasy, bear against the tide of worldliness and pride with all our force, that we may be kept unspotted till Jesus appears.

How a Prayer Meeting Died.

In a large town there was a goodly number of worshipers, who flourished in divine things some few years since, when they had many accessions to their numbers, in the days of green foliage, and many a laborer went among them to their joy. As I had not heard from that region for a number of years, I inquired of a brother who I knew lived there. I questioned thus: "Bro. C., how is the prayer meeting in your town where such glorious gatherings were held?" Ans. "Well, Bro. S., that is dead." "Why, Bro. C., how long since that took place?" "Several years since." "What was the cause of its death?" "Well, Bro. S., it would take sometime to give all that transpired, but I will try to tell you in short. For a time our meetings were numerous, many prayers were put up to God for his blessing, and many took part in the exercises, and were blessed. It was good times then; no one had to be urged to take part. After a spell, some three or four brethren must discuss the 'age to come' views, as they are called; one would advance his views, and another would think he could explain every thing, so that all must understand the prophets. They continued in this way until the attendance was so small many forsook and went otherwheres. These brethren would often be very lengthy, and sometimes personality would characterize their remarks, which would nearly sever christian fellowship. A little variance would show itself at times, love would be less warm, and did at last lose its power to keep together the strong ones. To worship God in these meetings latterly, would seemingly not be the supreme object of their meeting together, while some would come for that especial purpose, more particularly the lambs of the flock. They then had only to sit and hear those brethren until their patience was well tried. Many remarked it was of no good that such meetings were held, and finally as the Shepherd's voice was not heard, the lambs could not be called together; for at the latter part of the time only one or two short prayers were made during the meeting; they therefore found their numbers so few that they gave it up altogether, and so it died, and 'the mourners go about the streets.'" Pre-existence of Jesus Christ.

The following answers to the five questions proposed on this important subject are respectfully submitted.

1. Adam "formed of the dust of the ground" was the first Adam.

2. "If he had lived" to the present time, he would have been older than the "body—prepared" (Heb. 10 : 5) by the Father for his Son; but not so old as the Son, who "was in the beginning with God," who is "the first born of every creature," by whom God "created all things" "in heaven and in earth," etc. John 1 : 2–14; Col. 1 : 15–17; Eph. 3 : 9; Heb. 1 : 2; Rev. 3 : 14, etc.

3. 4. Answered above, by the plain scriptural distinction between what the second Adam was "according to the flesh," and what he was according to his divine and matchless sonship.—Rom. 1 : 3, 4; 9 : 5.

5. The second Adam, who "is the Lord from heaven" (1 Cor. 15 : 47), "could exist before the world was," although the first Adam "did not;" because it was the purpose of Him "who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will," that he should so exist; which the passages quoted above prove.

Our adorable Emanuel (Rev. 5 : 13) may, in some respects, be compared with Adam, Moses, and David, but, strictly speaking, he has no compeer.

"God, in the person of his Son,
Has all his mightiest works outdone."
"Nor earth, nor seas, nor suns, nor stars,
Nor heaven his full resemblance bears;
His beauties we can never trace,
Till we behold him face to face."

My Experience.—No. 1.

[BY REQUEST OF FRIENDS.]

I was taught in infancy the principles of christianity—that there was a heaven and hell—that good people occupied one and wicked people the other, and also taught what constituted these two characters. Likewise that there was a day of death, resurrection and judgment, when these two characters which constitute the whole world will be assembled before the Judge to receive their final sentence—"Come, ye blessed;" or, "Depart, ye cursed." These were ideas that greatly interested my youthful mind, and often occupied with solemn reflections my retired moments.

The first indelible impressions upon my mind of a religious character and a desire or resolution to be good, were made at the early age of six years, while witnessing the sickness and death of my oldest brother, a lad of ten years. I well remember the gloomy feeling that filled my mind as I gazed upon that lifeless form. Those eyes once beaming with affection and love, now closed forever in death,—those hands and feet once nimble and active like mine, now rigid and cold,—that voice that used to cheer and animate, now silent forever. O! thought I, is this the work of death? And will it one day be thus with me? Sad and mournful were the reflections while I thought of the unkindness, the unpleasant words spoken and feelings manifested for some trifling act towards that dear brother during our short stay together, and I heartily wished that I could ask his forgiveness. But no. I may speak, he will not hear; I may ask, he cannot reply; yea, I may try to awaken him, but in vain. Alas! he sleeps the sleep of death. I could only vent my feelings in sighs and tears, finding rest to my troubled mind by resolving to improve my future course of life. But youthful impressions are momentary. I probably soon forgot my resolutions and pursued a similar course.

Time passed on with occasional reproofs and instructions, till I was twelve years of age. Near this time one of my associates sought and obtained forgiveness of sin, and was happy in a Savior's love. This circumstance awakened me, and she being a few months younger than myself, I thought it high time to look about myself. There was a general solemnity pervading all hearts about this time, and the sound of an abundance of rain was heard, which was poured out in copious showers of divine grace upon the vicinity in the years 1826 and '27.

None but a poor awakened guilty sinner can know the feelings of my heart as I sat beneath the sound of the gospel, or listened to the powerful exhortations and fervent prayers of christians; and especially as I walked in the fields and groves at twilight for retirement and meditation, to hear the voice of my young associate as it rose on the evening air, poured forth in the ardor of devotion—in fervent supplication for poor sinners. It was then that solemn and indescribable feelings came over my soul—that the world, with all its pride, pomp and splendor, appeared transitory and vain. There was a gloomy sadness and melancholy all around, an aching void within, a certain reality that all was not well with me, and I almost regretted my existence. I knew that there was something, and I feared beyond my reach, that I must have or be lost—lost in the darkness of eternal death.

With these views and feelings I commenced reading the Bible, with a desire, if possible, to find the way which leads to eternal life. D. N. KIDDER.

The Love of God.

"God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life."—JOHN 3 : 16.

What a wonderful display of God's goodness is this! He who is from everlasting to everlasting; who ruleth in the armies of heaven and among the inhabitants of earth; who maketh the clouds his chariots and rideth upon the wings of the wind; who is of purer eyes than to behold sin with the least degree of allowance,—in his bosom this wondrous love was begotten. He thought upon man in his lost condition; "when there was no eye to pity and no hand to save, his eye pitied, his arm brought salvation." He gave his Son to be a homeless wanderer in this sinful world, gave him to be a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief, gave him to agonize in Gethsemane, gave him to be condemned and crucified on Calvary, amid scoffs, and taunts, and bloody sweat, to bleed, groan, suffer and die. All this for lost, ruined, fallen man. I do love to contemplate the unbounded goodness and loving kindness of my heavenly Father, who, out of the abundant riches of his grace, has given me a heart to love, obey, and serve him. Let friends forsake and foes assail, let the storm-cloud of adversity gather itself into one mighty wave with which to sweep the bosom bare, the child of God can securely trust in him, for "his banner over us is love." Let us love him because he first loved us.

Another manifestation of divine love is, the spiritual support the christian receives in following in the footsteps of the Captain of his salvation. "My grace shall be sufficient for thee." How beautiful are these words when we realize their true import by living faith. This grace we receive by asking God in the most unfailing confidence of a simple child. And if it be an unspeakable joy to be permitted to cry "Abba, Father," what must it be to have God expostulating more tenderly than the tenderest mother? "O thou afflicted, tossed by tempest and not comforted," think of the love with which the Father hath loved thee; what manner of love hath the Father showed towards us that we might become the sons of God. The mother's tender love is not equal to his. Her bosom may have been the resting-place for the cares of thy aching heart; but the bosom of the Almighty is ever open as the resting-place of thy soul. He guides and conducts you, and gives his angels charge concerning you.

He will hear the tenderest supplication of his humblest servant, and in no wise will he cast off the poor and forsaken of earth. He shall gather the lambs with his arms and carry them in his bosom. Lift up, therefore, your eyes to the Lord and to the throne of his grace, for the light of his countenance already shines upon you. Recognize that tender love and compassion which are even now at this moment flowing from his fountains of fullness upon your pathway.

Perishing sinner, you are now invited to come and share in this love. Will you not come to Christ now? Heed his inviting voice. Prepare to receive him as your Savior when he shall come in his everlasting kingdom. By the telescope of faith we penetrate the dark vista of the future, and bright visions of glory burst on our vision. Be of good cheer, if God be for us, fellow christian, who can be against us? And may the Lord grant that we may be prepared to stand complete in Christ in that great day. [illegible]

As the above paper fell into my hands I thought the perusal might be beneficial and cheering to others. I therefore send it to you for insertion in the Crisis. S.

Adversity Conquered.

BY MISS S. P. YOUNG.

Be patient, be hopeful,
Though storms strew your path,
Though the heavens should frown
In darkness and wrath;
Though the hopes that are brightest
The soonest decay,
Yet remember 't is darkest
The nearest to day.

Be patient, be hopeful,
Though tyrants should frown,
And despots should trample
Thy liberties down;
Though trials surround thee,
Cast aside all fear,
When darkness is deepest
The daylight is near.

Be patient, be hopeful,
Though hopes have all fled;
Though friends who were truest
Repose with the dead;
Though pain, grief and sorrow
Should in triumph prevail,
Mourn not, nor upbraid not,
Nor let thy heart fail.

The waves that are sparkling
In beauty so bright,
Rolled o'er the dark billows
And surged them in light;
Hope's sun is uprising,
The night is nigh gone;
Be patient, be hopeful,
The daylight will dawn.

God Complains.

Of what? Of the ignorance of his professed children. But is he not able to impart wisdom and knowledge? Yea, verily. Why then complain of those who lack wisdom? Because he hath provided the means adequate, and given us, if you please, the modus operandi by which we may secure this treasure. What if an individual manifests regret because his family are in indigent circumstances, when he has been assured that by a laborious application he may secure for them everything desirable, but through indolence he neglects; would not all consider him highly culpable? Just so in the case before us. God would not complain had he not furnished ample means of knowledge to his children. It is then their careless indolence which he deprecates. Like Esau, they appreciate things of less moment to be more consequential.

In the days of Isaiah, God complains bitterly of the imbecility of that once noble being whom he had formed with sufficient intellectual endowment to have "dominion" over the workmanship of his hands. So deteriorated are his professed children at this time that he actually gives the preference to the beasts of the field and the fowls of heaven.—Isa. 1:3; Jer. 2:7. The ox knoweth his owner, and that most stupid of all beasts knoweth the place from whence cometh his necessary food; but God complaineth that those who profess to love him are even below this, in point of knowledge. Though pining and languishing for want of spiritual food, they have forgotten their Master, and the place whither to repair to obtain this food.

God complains that his children do not know him; though several years must have expired since their birth, they do not know their Father! Supposing at the expiration of six, eight or ten years from the birth of a child, it is truthfully reported that that child does not know his father; what would be the conclusion arrived at? I think one of the three following reasons would be immediately assigned: either some VERY GREAT CHANGE must have come over the father, or the child must have been bereft of reason, or there had been a long, LONG separation of the two.

Now as to the first, we are assured from high authority that in our heavenly Father "there is no variableness neither shadow of turning"; "He is the same yesterday, today and forever"; consequently this cannot be the reason why his children have forgotten him. But the second reason may be the one, that is, they may have allowed sin to so becloud the horizon of their mind as to induce spiritual idiocy, or, to use a scriptural phrase, have caused them to become "sottish," and thus they have become estranged. So long have they been separated they have forgotten his sweet voice and follow the voice of a stranger. They scarce dare use the loving epithet of "my Father," though in their infancy he caressed them lovingly, and provided means to meet their expenses at the bank of heaven, and beside, he whispered sweet promises in their ears of a rich patrimony with his own Son, giving them at the same time something to help them through this waste, howling wilderness, called by Paul, "earnest money," or the "earnest of our inheritance." But yet they were sufficiently foolish to allow a few earthly pebbles to separate them from this friend so emphatically above all others.

They do not recollect what their Father has told them about his person or his attributes. When he has repeated again and again that his Son Jesus Christ is the express image of his Father's PERSON, they boldly affirm God hath no person.—Heb 1:3; Col. 1:15; Phil. 2:6; 2 Cor. 4:4. And when he informs them that he has a location, a dwelling place for his person, they are "sottish" enough to declare he is everywhere and nowhere in particular.—2 Chron. 30:27; Ps. 68:5; 1 Kings 8:30, 39, 43, 49. Thus when Jesus Christ affirms that he LEFT the Father to come into the world," he left everywhere to come into the world, thus proving this world to be nowhere. Well, when he again asserts that he "left this world to go to the Father," they make him say that he left everywhere to go nowhere! O my Father, I wonder not that thou hast denominated such as "sottish"! But there is a divine emanation which God hath sent forth from himself into the world which is ubiquitious, so that if we fly to the uttermost "part of the earth," we shall find it present to reprove and comfort. God says "he has given a portion of it to every man to profit withal"; but do not let us be sufficiently "sottish" to affirm this to be all the God there is. God's Spirit is something he himself pours out; hence it is not a person. It cannot be seen though the influences can be felt, but God can, and he has promised that the pure in heart shall see him. And then he speaks of his attributes as being love and mercy, showing in his word he will do the best that love and mercy can do, even for his enemies. If they will not serve him, he declares he will put them out of the way; that is, he will consume them into smoke and ashes, and cause them to be in the same situation as though they had never existed.—Ps. 37:20; Mal. 4:1; Oba. 16; and a hundred more on the same point may be quoted from the law of God.

Again, God complains by the prophet Jeremiah, relative to the birds of heaven, possessing superior understanding of the "times and seasons" to his children. Hear him: "Yea, the stork in the heaven knoweth her appointed times; and the turtle and the crane and the swallow observe the time of their coming; but my people know not the judgment of the Lord." Also in the days of Christ he accuses the professed church of the same thing. He told them they observed the signs in the sky, and thus made their calculations accordingly, but they were too dull of comprehension in spiritual things to understand the signs of that present time. Though they professed a great deal of religion, outwardly appearing very godly, he who knew what was in their hearts calls them hypocrites. "He answered and said unto them, When it is evening, ye say, it will be fair weather; for the sky is red. And in the morning, it will be foul weather to-day: for the sky is red and lowering. O ye hypocrites, ye can discern the face of the sky; but can ye not discern the signs of the times?" If they would have given heed to the teachings of God, their beautiful city might have been spared; but because of their willful blindness relative to the "signs of the times" this beautiful structure was laid waste. "For the days shall come upon thee, that thine enemies shall cast a trench about thee, and compass thee round, and keep thee in on every side. And shall lay thee even with the ground, and thy children within thee: and they shall not leave in thee one stone upon another: because thou knewest not the time of thy visitation."

If this great Teacher gave such sharp reproof to the professed church of God for not understanding the signs of the times at his first coming, if they pretended that the prophecies relating to Christ's first coming, thirty-two in number, and all having a literal fulfillment before their eyes, were too intricate to be understood, what will he say to his professed church at his second coming, that have seen all the moral and physical signs so faithfully delineated in the Word of God, fulfilled before their eyes? The multifarious chains of Daniel and John's prophecies, together with the Savior's predictions of the signs in the sun and in the moon and stars, and also the moral condition of the world by two striking precedents—the days of Noah, and the days of Lot! and also the moral state of the professed church given by an inspired apostle in his second letter to Timothy, third chap.; after having all this before their eyes, will a plea of ignorance exculpate them? Have they reason to expect more lenient language will be addressed to them than to those who did the same things eighteen hundred years ago? Nay, verily. God's ways are equal. Then let us search the Word of God faithfully—yea, as for hid treasures, for by that we shall be judged at the last day.

But we should notice in all these complaints of God, it is not a deficiency of brain, a lack of intellect which he deprecates, but a perversion of that intellect. In Jer. 4:22, where God accuses his professed children of being so foolish and sottish as not to know their Father, he adds these words of reprehension: "They are wise to do evil, but to do good they have no knowledge." Perhaps they can devise some deep schemes to annoy the faithful ones the unconverted never would have dreamed of. Like Judas they know the place. Perhaps they possess sufficient skill to plan and execute the most complicated piece of mechanism, and form multitudinous plans for self-emolument and aggrandizement, exerting at the same time every physical nerve and sinew for the accomplishment of the same. But the plan of salvation wrought out by Jesus Christ and lucidly described in the Sacred Volume is to them wholly incomprehensible! Again, they may possess attractive conversational talents, and pride themselves on being able to entertain at the levee or soiree, or certainly to contribute their part at the common convivial party; but when at the humble and social prayer meeting (if indeed they be found there) they have no talent to speak a word of encouragement to that weak youth who may have just entered his name on the list with those who are running for an incorruptible prize; nor even to inform of their own spiritual whereabouts. Should we marvel if God impute folly and sottishness to such? It does not call for infinite power to descry the spiritual condition of such.

But is there no help to relieve from this sad dilemma? No power to extricate from this sad, deep pit? Yes! Give ear, oh ye heavens, and be astonished, oh ye earth! The Eternal himself sues for a renewal of the acquaintanceship! He informs us that his bowels of compassion yet yearn over such. He exhorts them with the language of tenderness to awake and cast off this worldly policy and listen to his words, and he will yet be a Father unto them and love them freely.

The Fourth Beatitude.

"Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled."

'Tis worthy of our highest admiration, that none of the sayings of our blessed Savior, necessary for our salvation, are hidden or mysterious, dark or unfathomable, but on the contrary are adapted to every capacity, every situation and circumstance in life. In the glowing description of our Savior, in his ever memorable sermon on the mount, none are more strikingly interesting, or easy to be understood, than those referred to as hungering and thirsting after righteousness, with the sure promise of being filled.

The pain produced by hunger and thirst, with regard to the body, is something with which in a greater or lesser degree all are acquainted, and in order to escape the sensation of uneasiness produced by these cravings, it is necessary that we pay attention to the physical wants of our nature. For instance. If we neglect to administer to the demands of our appetite, we suffer the distress of hunger and thirst, which, if not satiated with food adapted to our relish, will derange the whole system, and disease in some form, will be the inevitable consequence. And in order to secure comfort and harmony in the physical department, this process must be continually carried on without interruption. These facts, however, are so simple and self-evident, that it would appear like time spent in vain, to bring them before the mind, nevertheless, it is sometimes useful and important to remember the day, even of "small things." Individuals, who cannot take their natural food, we at once regard as being sick, or in some measure out of health, and even if no indications of disease are to be discovered in the outward form, yet it is evident that inroads are being made on parts of the system concealed from our view; hence it becomes necessary, in order to restore the system to its usual health and vigor, to resort to some remedy that will have the desired effect. And if we are so fortunate as to regain our health, the greatest of earthly blessings, we feel more than compensated for the pains taken to bring about the happy result. O then, if this clay tenement, which is compared to a flower of the field whose ephemeral existence so quickly passes away, requires so much attention to secure its welfare and happiness, with what care and sanctity should we regard the spirit, of which this body is the receptacle! With what zeal and ardor should we labor to procure the food that alone can satisfy the soul!

But the thought painfully arises, that there are some who have no desire or relish for the spiritual food that may be obtained by all who will apply for it. With emotions of sorrow, we are compelled to say to such, there is no blessing in reversion for them, but on the contrary leanness and barrenness of soul, while here on earth, and in the end "everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and the glory of his power." The promise, then, of being filled with righteousness, is only to those who hunger and thirst after it, while it is just as certain that those who do not hunger and thirst, will go unblest, and consequently unsaved. O sad and fearful result of blinded infatuation, to starve in sight of food, to perish in sight of the remedy! and yet this is the unhappy course of multiplied thousands who are invited to the gospel feast, but who for want of appetite, or relish for spiritual food, refuse to come, and thus perish in their sins.

Behold the contrast! in those who have satisfied their longing souls at the spiritual banquet of love. See them in their native simplicity, dressed in the beauteous robe of redemption, wrought out by the Lamb of Calvary, their hearts through grace subdued and made the temple of the Holy Spirit, the new, blest name of love written on their brow, while faith, the helmet of salvation, environs them round about, and their hope in the dear Redeemer proves as an anchor, sure and steadfast, entering into that within the vail. O! then, if these are the blest, who would not desire to be blest? If these are they who have hungered and thirsted after righteousness, who are so abundantly filled with such almost insupportable fullness; who would not be induced to labor for the same blessings, the same bright prospects, and the same happy fruition in the end that awaits all the faithful?

Our Words.

"Speak kindly, for an unkind word
May probe a tender part,
And be a keen-edged knife to pierce
Some tempted, struggling heart."

O the power there is in language, the importance of always using kind expressions! What human heart but welcomes them, yea, the brute creation recognize the vast difference between kind and unkind words.

But what are unkind words? Words of decision are not unkind, for what peace could be enjoyed in a family where parents are undecided? Who could desire the society in later years of those who have not been dealt with in decision while children? who could expect to receive benefits from such, seeing they have never learned to yield to others?

Earnest words are not necessarily unkind. The times in which we live demand earnest language sometimes, as well as an earnest spirit constantly. Words of reproof are not unkind at suitable times. Who so friendly as one who dares, with a christian spirit, reprove for a thoughtless act, an unconsidered habit, which cripples influence? hence David (Ps. 141:5) says, "Let the righteous reprove me, it shall be an excellent oil." My heart responds amen. Let the righteous reprove me, let me know I have their watchcare.

But what are unkind words? Go ask the human family at large; go ask that husband who has braved the storms of life till his brow has become furrowed with care, if the relating of that fault to friends by one beloved was not considered unkind, or that reproof for a non-important word in language not quite as affectionate as might have become the one that uttered it, had she considered the numerous trials that had almost confused the brain.

"Speak kindly, there are hours when he
By anxious care is tossed,
And shadows deep lie on his brow,
By business trials crossed."

Go ask that wife, has she ever realized the power of unkind words? Her form is bowed with sickness, care and toil; her cheek pale, with an expression of anxiety. Methinks one can read secret grief, silent suffering, beneath that settled sadness of deportment. Not long since, while visiting, I was thrown into the society of a gentleman, lady and child, who were visiting at the same place. Before leaving home the child was not as well as usual, yet not sufficiently unwell to detain the mother at home. After leaving home the child grew worse, until it was unsafe leaving it alone. The mother watched over it night and day, until apparently she needed being watched over. At this crisis her husband came in one day and seated himself by the side of his wife, with the little one in her lap. A moment's pause. He sternly remarks, "You ought to have remained at home with the child." The noble christian woman made no reply; perhaps only one present observed the large tear start, but as quickly driven back. Had his dignity forbade rendering service, it surely could not have suffered violence by expressions of kindness; had he remarked affectionately, "I am sorry your visit was so nearly spoiled," could she have felt his heart beat in sympathy for her by some kind expression, her burden would have lost full half its weight.

Then there's the orphan. How sad the name even. Once the strong arm of a father was leaned upon; it now affords no protection; it is palsied in death. Once in wanderings, the earnest prayer of a mother followed; but no longer her penetrating gaze scans the winding course, minutely pointing out dangers therein. Deal very gently with the orphan. Speak very kindly to them; the world must, with all its chilling influences, at times present a sad prospect in an hour of temptation; the feet may go astray. Reprove not too severely.

"Speak kindly to the orphan,
Let no harsh tone be heard,
They must sufficiently endure
Without your unkind word."

And then the aged, middle aged, the reckless youth and children,—Jesus died for them all. Perhaps the aged look back upon a life of sin. Sufficient for them is this crushing retrospective view. Comfort them in their declining days,—if possible inspire hope toward God in their hearts,—their sun will soon set.

And children; speak carefully to them; their young hearts are not callous through the deceitfulness of sin; they are very susceptible of impressions, good or bad, false or true. Great is our responsibility towards them, noble is the work of trying to implant holy principles in their tender breasts.

My dear brethren and sisters, suffer the word of exhortation. We know the large amount of misery occasioned by unkind expressions. Shall we not seek, by prayer and watchfulness, to alleviate this suffering as far as in us lies, by never using words that may wound, but on the contrary those that may heal? "But," says one, "I am so tempted sometimes, I can hardly refrain from speaking sharply." Did you ever think the one you spoke so sharply to might be as severely tempted as yourself at the same time? and if no higher state of grace had been attained than what you have attained unto, I fear the provocation would be to anger and not to good works. Let us consider the great lesson taught by our Savior, of sympathy, of self-denial in sacrificing our feelings to others, in healing the wounded, binding the torn, weeping with the weepers. Let us more fully live for God and the creatures of his care. Let us individually, amid the fearful existing apostasy, bear against the tide of worldliness and pride with all our force, that we may be kept unspotted till Jesus appears.

How a Prayer Meeting Died.

In a large town there was a goodly number of worshipers, who flourished in divine things some few years since, when they had many accessions to their numbers, in the days of green foliage, and many a laborer went among them to their joy. As I had not heard from that region for a number of years, I inquired of a brother who I knew lived there. I questioned thus: "Bro. C., how is the prayer meeting in your town where such glorious gatherings were held?" Ans. "Well, Bro. S., that is dead." "Why, Bro. C., how long since that took place?" "Several years since." "What was the cause of its death?" "Well, Bro. S., it would take sometime to give all that transpired, but I will try to tell you in short. For a time our meetings were numerous, many prayers were put up to God for his blessing, and many took part in the exercises, and were blessed. It was good times then; no one had to be urged to take part. After a spell, some three or four brethren must discuss the 'age to come' views, as they are called; one would advance his views, and another would think he could explain every thing, so that all must understand the prophets. They continued in this way until the attendance was so small many forsook and went otherwheres. These brethren would often be very lengthy, and sometimes personality would characterise their remarks, which would nearly sever christian fellowship. A little variance would show itself at times, love would be less warm, and did at last lose its power to keep together the strong ones. To worship God in these meetings latterly, would seemingly not be the supreme object of their meeting together, while some would come for that especial purpose, more particularly the lambs of the flock. They then had only to sit and hear those brethren until their patience was well tried. Many remarked it was of no good that such meetings were held, and finally as the Shepherd's voice was not heard, the lambs could not be called together; for at the latter part of the time only one or two short prayers were made during the meeting; they therefore found their numbers so few that they gave it up altogether, and so it died, and 'the mourners go about the streets.'"

Pre-existence of Jesus Christ.

The following answers to the five questions proposed on this important subject are respectfully submitted.

1. Adam "formed of the dust of the ground" was the first Adam.

2. "If he had lived" to the present time, he would have been older than the "body—prepared" (Heb. 10:5) by the Father for his Son; but not so old as the Son, who "was in the beginning with God," who is "the first born of every creature," by whom God "created all things" "in heaven and in earth," etc. John 1:2–14; Col. 1:15–17; Eph. 3:9; Heb. 1:2; Rev. 3:14, etc.

3. 4. Answered above, by the plain scriptural distinction between what the second Adam was "according to the flesh," and what he was according to his divine and matchless sonship.—Rom. 1:3, 4; 9:5.

5. The second Adam, who "is the Lord from heaven" (1 Cor. 15:47), "could exist before the world was," although the first Adam "did not;" because it was the purpose of Him "who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will," that he should so exist; which the passages quoted above prove.

Our adorable Emanuel (Rev. 5:13) may, in some respects, be compared with Adam, Moses, and David, but, strictly speaking, he has no compeer.

"God, in the person of his Son,
Has all his mightiest works outdone."
"Nor earth, nor seas, nor suns, nor stars,
Nor heaven his full resemblance bears;
His beauties we can never trace,
Till we behold him face to face."

My Experience.—No. 1.

[BY REQUEST OF FRIENDS.]

I was taught in infancy the principles of christianity—that there was a heaven and hell—that good people occupied one and wicked people the other, and also taught what constituted these two characters. Likewise that there was a day of death, resurrection and judgment, when these two characters which constitute the whole world will be assembled before the Judge to receive their final sentence—"Come, ye blessed;" or, "Depart, ye cursed." These were ideas that greatly interested my youthful mind, and often occupied with solemn reflections my retired moments.

The first indelible impressions upon my mind of a religious character and a desire or resolution to be good, were made at the early age of six years, while witnessing the sickness and death of my oldest brother, a lad of ten years. I well remember the gloomy feeling that filled my mind as I gazed upon that lifeless form. Those eyes once beaming with affection and love, now closed forever in death,—those hands and feet once nimble and active like mine, now rigid and cold,—that voice that used to cheer and animate, now silent forever. O! thought I, is this the work of death? And will it one day be thus with me? Sad and mournful were the reflections while I thought of the unkindness, the unpleasant words spoken and feelings manifested for some trifling act towards that dear brother during our short stay together, and I heartily wished that I could ask his forgiveness. But no. I may speak, he will not hear; I may ask, he cannot reply; yea, I may try to awaken him, but in vain. Alas! he sleeps the sleep of death. I could only vent my feelings in sighs and tears, finding rest to my troubled mind by resolving to improve my future course of life. But youthful impressions are momentary. I probably soon forgot my resolutions and pursued a similar course.

Time passed on with occasional reproofs and instructions, till I was twelve years of age. Near this time one of my associates sought and obtained forgiveness of sin, and was happy in a Savior's love. This circumstance awakened me, and she being a few months younger than myself, I thought it high time to look about myself. There was a general solemnity pervading all hearts about this time, and the sound of an abundance of rain was heard, which was poured out in copious showers of divine grace upon the vicinity in the years 1826 and '27.

None but a poor awakened guilty sinner can know the feelings of my heart as I sat beneath the sound of the gospel, or listened to the powerful exhortations and fervent prayers of christians; and especially as I walked in the fields and groves at twilight for retirement and meditation, to hear the voice of my young associate as it rose on the evening air, poured forth in the ardor of devotion—in fervent supplication for poor sinners. It was then that solemn and indescribable feelings came over my soul—that the world, with all its pride, pomp and splendor, appeared transitory and vain. There was a gloomy sadness and melancholy all around, an aching void within, a certain reality that all was not well with me, and I almost regretted my existence. I knew that there was something, and I feared beyond my reach, that I must have or be lost—lost in the darkness of eternal death.

With these views and feelings I commenced reading the Bible, with a desire, if possible, to find the way which leads to eternal life.

The Love of God.

"God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life."—John 3:16.

What a wonderful display of God's goodness is this! He who is from everlasting to everlasting; who ruleth in the armies of heaven and among the inhabitants of earth; who maketh the clouds his chariots and rideth upon the wings of the wind; who is of purer eyes than to behold sin with the least degree of allowance,—in his bosom this wondrous love was begotten. He thought upon man in his lost condition; "when there was no eye to pity and no hand to save, his eye pitied, his arm brought salvation." He gave his Son to be a homeless wanderer in this sinful world, gave him to be a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief, gave him to agonize in Gethsemane, gave him to be condemned and crucified on Calvary, amid scoffs, and taunts, and bloody sweat, to bleed, groan, suffer and die. All this for lost, ruined, fallen man. I do love to contemplate the unbounded goodness and loving kindness of my heavenly Father, who, out of the abundant riches of his grace, has given me a heart to love, obey, and serve him. Let friends forsake and foes assail, let the storm-cloud of adversity gather itself into one mighty wave with which to sweep the bosom bare, the child of God can securely trust in him, for "his banner over us is love." Let us love him because he first loved us.

Another manifestation of divine love is, the spiritual support the christian receives in following in the footsteps of the Captain of his salvation. "My grace shall be sufficient for thee." How beautiful are these words when we realize their true import by living faith. This grace we receive by asking God in the most unfailing confidence of a simple child. And if it be an unspeakable joy to be permitted to cry "Abba, Father," what must it be to have God expostulating more tenderly than the tenderest mother? "O thou afflicted, tossed by tempest and not comforted," think of the love with which the Father hath loved thee; what manner of love hath the Father showed towards us that we might become the sons of God. The mother's tender love is not equal to his. Her bosom may have been the resting-place for the cares of thy aching heart; but the bosom of the Almighty is ever open as the resting-place of thy soul. He guides and conducts you, and gives his angels charge concerning you.

He will hear the tenderest supplication of his humblest servant, and in no wise will he cast off the poor and forsaken of earth. He shall gather the lambs with his arms and carry them in his bosom. Lift up, therefore, your eyes to the Lord and to the throne of his grace, for the light of his countenance already shines upon you. Recognize that tender love and compassion which are even now at this moment flowing from his fountains of fullness upon your pathway.

Perishing sinner, you are now invited to come and share in this love. Will you not come to Christ now? Heed his inviting voice. Prepare to receive him as your Savior when he shall come in his everlasting kingdom. By the telescope of faith we penetrate the dark vista of the future, and bright visions of glory burst on our vision. Be of good cheer, if God be for us, fellow christian, who can be against us? And may the Lord grant that we may be prepared to stand complete in Christ in that great day.

Modern Unbelief of the Resurrection.

BY REV. J. PANTON HAM, ENGLAND.

"Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you that God should raise the dead?" inquired Paul, in his memorable apology before Agrippa and the court of Festus at Cesarea. It was a question suggested to the apostle's mind by his allusion to the promise made by God to the Hebrew fathers, concerning the everlasting possession of the land of Canaan, a promise which Paul and the Christian apostles taught, would be literally fulfilled to these ancient fathers, and their true descendants—the children of Abraham by faith. They were at pains to show that this promise had never been fulfilled,—"These all died in faith not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth. For they that say such things declare plainly that they seek a country," etc. Heb. 11: 13.

The proto-martyr Stephen, thus spoke of this matter before the Jewish Sanhedrim, "Abraham, when his father was dead, removed into this land wherein ye now dwell. And he (God) gave him none inheritance in it, no, not so much as to set his foot on; yet He promised that He would give it to him for a possession, and to his seed after him." Acts 7: 5. Compare also, Gal. 3: 16–19. This promise, it is evident, could only be fulfilled by giving Abraham and his spiritual seed, who are the true Israelites, a resurrection from the dead. Hence the prominence of this doctrine in the apostolic writings and discourses, and the reason of the query put by Paul on the occasion above referred to—"Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you that God should raise the dead?" As if he had said—"You look for the fulfillment of the promises to the fathers that they shall inherit this land forever, and you hope, as children of Abraham, to share this future inheritance on the earth: but the fathers are dead, and you too will die, and therefore this 'Hope of Israel' can only be fulfilled by raising up the honored inheritors of this kingdom of heaven from the slumbers of the grave, and why should you prefer your crude philosophies about never-dying souls to this glorious revelation from heaven—the resurrection from the dead? In disbelieving this doctrine 'ye do err, not knowing the Scriptures, nor the power of God.'"

The resurrection of the dead, upon which such momentous issues depend to the human race, is pre-eminently a doctrine of revelation. No analogies in nature can do more than very imperfectly illustrate a fact so unique as the revivification of what has actually ceased to live. Such as are made use of, as, for example, the germination of seed, and the development of moth existence from the chrysalis are only apparent analogies. In neither case has death taken place. The life that supervenes here, is not upon death, but upon dormancy. But in the resurrection of the dead, deceased humanity is restored to consciousness and activity. Resurrection gives them a new-birth into being,—by this stupendous miracle of Divine power, they are "born again" into the eternal life which God has promised to bestow through Christ—"Resurrection and the Life"—upon all believers.

But is this doctrine believed now? Nay, verily! Bold as the statement may appear, we hesitate not to reiterate it, that the Christian Church of the nineteenth century denies the doctrine of the Resurrection of the Dead. And, therefore, there is as much applicability in the query of the apostle to professing christians now, as to that Sadduceean and Pago-Roman auditory to whom it was first put. An assertion so startling demands proof, and this we proceed very briefly and plainly to furnish. Let us, however, in the first place, see what the professing church really does believe in this matter.

Death in the popular apprehension, at least as regards mankind, does not imply a cessation of the living existence, but a transition into a new condition of existence. BACON, in his Essay on Death, says—"So we see Death exempts not a man from being, but only presents an alteration." The term death is therefore understood in relation to humanity, not in its common sense, but in an uncommon sense, a non-natural and figurative sense. When death, so called, takes place, a separation, we are told, is effected between that part of the man which is his rational and moral self, called popularly the soul, and sometimes the spirit; and that part of him which is the tangible, material organism, in which he is said to have a temporary abode, and which is only necessary to him as the inhabitant of a material world, being the instrument of, or medium by which he communicates with, and acts in it. This material tenement, in popular language, is called the body. The man himself, we are assured, is not the body, but the soul or spirit, which, while an inhabitant of the body, is living an imprisoned and unnatural life, hemmed in by obstructions and limitations, from which, so says the popular theology—but not so the common instincts—man is only too glad to escape by that great liberator of the soul's life, called Death. Life which, when first created by God, was looked on by him with complacency, and pronounced "very good," is by our modern theology, pronounced a real evil. And death, which the Book of God declares to be "the wages of sin," the "curse," and "the last enemy" of man, is declared by the consentient voices of the churches to be the way of salvation—the emancipator of the imprisoned soul—the great blessing of life! The following poetic extravaganza is no intentional, although a real burlesque. The poet, "in fine frenzy rolling," puts into verse his own and the popular faith:—

"Life makes the soul dependent on the dust,
Death gives her wings to mount above the spheres.
Thro' chinks styled organs, dim life peeps at light;
Death bursts th' involving cloud, and all is day;
All eye, all ear, the disembodied power.
Death has feigned evils nature shall not feel;
Life, ills substantial, wisdom cannot shun.
Is not the mighty mind,—that son of heaven!—
By Tyrant Life dethron'd, imprison'd, pain'd?
By Death enlarged, ennobled, deified?
Death but entombs the body—Life the soul."

We pause not to point out the contradictions, the follies, and even the blasphemies, of this piece of poetical piety, but pass on to the proof of our assertion that popular christianity denies the resurrection of the dead.

The soul or spirit of man, we are assured, is the man himself—the rational, emotional, and moral being called man. This soul or spirit, which, strangely enough, is sometimes called a part of the man, and sometimes the man himself, is not affected by death, but is left, or rather liberated intact by this (may we call it?) catastrophe. Death, according to this theory, dissolves the body of man, not the man himself. Then, of course, it literally follows that the man does not die. And if the man does not die, the man cannot rise from the dead, for what has never died, can never rise from the dead. "That which thou sowest is not quickened except it die." Here is our first proof. If our logic be at fault, we shall be gratified to have our error exposed. To us it seems a very correct conclusion, that the theology which denies that man, properly speaking, ever dies, must also deny that man, properly speaking, ever rises from the dead.—Examiner.

Sunday Schools.

We know, cannot be kept up without books In the apostles' time, when there was no difference between the Sunday school and other meetings, the books used were almost solely the Epistles and other books of the New Testament. The "story books" were the new and wonderful story of Christ, his life, death, and resurrection. And we can have no better books now.

But we do and must have other books as well. The Bible has produced a christian civilization, with its world of books, and we must accept the fact and make the best of it. If there are books not as good as they should be, the only remedy is to get better ones instead. And children, for Sunday reading,—children whose minds are in the forming stage,—need good books if any body in the world needs them.

If Sunday school books contain wrong views of God's character, we cannot expect children will easily learn to love that character. We have heard of the child whose mother told how God would punish with undying anguish those that love him not, who replied: "Mother, I wish I had never been born." How many children have wished so, who did not dare, for fear of the rod, or for the unscriptural "terrors of the Lord," to say so! How shall they learn not to be afraid of God, but to love him? Among other helps and guides they must have good Sunday school books.

Our Publication Society will make it an object to secure such books, so far as possible. Some that are now published may be selected and recommended. Some must be written. To make a good book which children will love to read, requires no mean order of talent; yet we trust there are those among us equal to the task. We hope to hear from them in due time, and doubt not they will be amply encouraged.

For the Crisis.

Pre-existence of Jesus.

In a late No. of the Crisis, T. M. Proble wishes any one holding the simple idea expressed in John 17: 5, would answer the questions proposed under the above heading. The idea is, Jesus had a glory with the Father before the world was. Now Jesus is the author of this idea, and it must be as true as his resurrection. A glory with the Father implies an existence with the Father, or a pre-existence. Peter and Paul distinguish his human existence from the former by the phrase;—"according to the flesh."—Acts 2: 30; Rom. 1: 3. In one order of being he made all things, and was David's Lord; in another, or "according to the flesh," he was a descendant of Adam and David.

Lastly, I understand the writer to inquire how the second Adam or Son of God could exist before the world was, if the first Adam did not so exist? I answer: by the wisdom and power of God who can alter the work of his own hands, by making a being of a higher order, like unto beings of a lower order, and beings of a lower order like unto beings of a higher order. Thus the Son of God, who was higher than the angels, humbled himself to be made like unto men. Those of the human family who receive his Spirit, and copy his example here, will be made like him in his exaltation hereafter. But let us beware, for "every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God."—1 John 4: 3. J. M. BRUCE.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, DECEMBER 26, 1860.

Close of the Year.

An eventful year is now closing; and we may well expect that the one about to begin will be characterized by events far more startling than any within the recollection of our readers. We cannot tell definitely what they will be; but are satisfied that they will be such as to increase the "distress of nations," and confirm the faithful in their hopes of soon seeing the King of kings. We must be near this grand event.

Dear Brn. and Srs., let us spend the last days of the closing year in careful self-examination, correcting all our mistakes, confessing all our faults, asking forgiveness for all unkind words and broken promises, and forsaking all our bad habits, that we may begin the new year happy in the love of God, with a strong determination, by the help of the Lord, to bear every cross, do every duty, every where, and keep ourselves "unspotted from the world," till Jesus comes to adorn his bride with honor, glory, and immortality.

☞ We understand that Eld. E. Burnham is successful in his labors in Philadelphia. A friend writing from there says:—"He opens the eyes of many people about the personal coming of Christ, his advent near, etc. He is also faithful on the life and death question, many beginning to see that going to heaven at death is not Bible doctrine, but tradition. Last Sunday (16th) three thousand persons were out to hear him, of all denominations."

☞ The prayers of the church are desired for the recovery of Sr. P. Wellman's child, of Belchertown, Mass, who has been sick some seven weeks.

Luke 9: 28-37.

Please explain to me Luke 9: 28–37. We read in Deut. 34: 5–6, that Moses died, and the Lord buried him. How came he to appear with Elijah on the mount of transfiguration? C. I. DEYO.

In Deut. 34: 5–6, we read, "So Moses the servant of the Lord died there in the land of Moab, according to the word of the Lord. And he buried him in a valley in the land of Moab." In Josh. 1: 1–2, we read, "Now after the death of Moses the servant of the Lord, it came to pass, that the Lord spake unto Joshua the son of Nun, Moses' minister, saying, Moses my servant is dead." This is simple historic language containing no figures, and must be understood just as it reads.

Let us first suppose that the popular view entertained at the present day is correct. Then it was only Moses' house, or body, that died and was buried, while the real, veritable Moses, went to heaven—for he was a good man. If it is true that Moses lived in the "body just as a man lives in a house," then all can plainly see that the house in which he lived was not himself; and also that all the Lord says to Moses is addressed to him, and not his house. In Deut. 31: 16 we read, "And the Lord said unto Moses, behold thou shalt sleep (margin, lie down) with thy fathers." Do the words Moses and thou stand for his house or himself? If for his house, then that must be the accountable person, for the Lord talks to the "real man." Well, this real Moses, let him be what he may, the Lord says shall "sleep," or "lie down" with his fathers. To us it seems absurd to suppose that this language is addressed to the house in which Moses lived.

In Deut. 32: 48–51, we read, "The Lord spake unto Moses, ... saying, get thee up into this mountain Abarim, unto Mount Nebo, which is in the land of Moab, that is over against Jericho, and behold the land of Canaan, which I give unto the children of Israel for a possession, and die in the mount whither thou goest up." When the reason is given for his death and Aaron's, it is said to be "because ye trespassed against me at the waters of Meribah-Kadesh, in the wilderness of Zin." "So Moses the servant of the Lord died there in the land of Moab, according to the word of the Lord, and he buried him in a valley in the land of Moab."—Deut. 34: 5–6. Which died, Moses, or his house? The Bible says it was Moses. Shall we believe it? The one that died was the one that served the Lord, and not the house that this servant lived in; and the one that died was the one that was buried. Where was Moses after he was dead and buried? Popular theology says he was in heaven praising God. This being true, Moses was a great gainer in consequence of his "trespass" "at the waters of Meribah-Kadesh," for he got to glory much quicker than he otherwise would; while Joshua, for his obedience, was obliged to stay on the old earth and pass through many trials, while Moses was in heaven! Does this look reasonable? especially when the Lord said he was "dead and "buried?" It was the one that trespassed, who died and was buried.

If the body is only a house for a soul to live in, then that soul is what commits the trespass, the one that God addresses, and the one that died and was buried. We can see no possibility of avoiding this conclusion. Then it follows that, whether we call the body or soul Moses, he was dead and buried. We would ask the candid if they think God would say to Joshua, "Moses my servant is dead," if he was alive at that time? We leave the honest reader to his own reflections on this point.

We pass now to consider the account of the transfiguration as recorded by Luke. "And it came to pass about an eight days after these sayings, he took Peter and John and James, and went up into a mountain to pray. And as he prayed, the fashion of his countenance was altered, and his raiment was white and glistering. And, behold, there talked with him two men, which were Moses and Elias; who appeared in glory, and spake of his decease which he should accomplish at Jerusalem. But Peter and they that were with him were heavy with sleep: and when they were awake, they saw his glory, and the two men that stood with him. And it came to pass, as they departed from him, Peter said unto Jesus, Master, it is good for us to be here: and let us make three tabernacles: one for thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias: not knowing what he said. While he thus spake, there came a cloud and overshadowed them: and they feared as they entered into the cloud. And there came a voice out of the cloud, saying, This is my beloved Son: hear him. And when the voice was past, Jesus was found alone. And they kept it close, and told no man in those days any of those things which they had seen."—Luke 9: 28–36. In Matt. 17: 1–9, we have an account of the same event. Jesus says in verse 9, "Tell the vision to no man, until the Son of man be risen again from the dead." Horama, the word here rendered vision, is from horao, which, among other definitions, is defined "to see mentally." One definition of horama reads, "a supernatural appearance."

We will now give all the examples where the word occurs. The next is in Acts 7: 31. When the angel of the Lord appeared to Moses "in a flame of fire in a bush," "he wondered at the (horama) sight." This was "a supernatural appearance." The word occurs again in Acts 9: 10, 12. "And there was a certain disciple at Damascus, named Ananias; and to him said the Lord in a (horama) vision." Ananias is instructed in this vision where to go and find "Saul of Tarsus; for, behold, he prayeth, and hath seen in a (horama) vision a man named Ananias coming in." In this case, the "man" Ananias did not actually come in, only as we see persons in our dreams Ananias was not really present with "Saul of Tarsus." The same word occurs again in Acts 10: 3, 17, 19. In this account we are informed that "Cornelius . . . a devout man" had "a (horama) vision evidently about the ninth hour of the day," in which he is instructed to "send men to Joppa, and call for one Simon, whose surname is Peter." Just before the men, sent by Cornelius, arrived where Peter was stopping, it will be recollected that Peter "fell into a trance," in which he "saw heaven opened" and "a great sheet" was "let down to the earth; wherein were all manner of four-footed beasts of the earth, and wild beasts, and creeping things, and fowls of the air." We presume no one supposes that real beasts were let down out of heaven, only in appearance, as things are seen in dreams. "Now while Peter doubted in himself what this (horama) vision which he had seen should mean, behold, the men which were sent from Cornelius . . . stood before the gate." "While Peter thought on the (horama) vision, the Spirit said unto him, behold, three men seek thee." After this, Peter went up to Jerusalem, and rehearsed the matter; saying, "I was in the city of Joppa, praying; and in a trance I saw a (horama) vision."—Acts 11: 5. Subsequently, when he "was sleeping between two soldiers," and delivered by the angel, it is said he knew "not that it was true which was done by the angel; but thought he saw a (horama) vision."—Acts 12: 9. On account of being waked out of sleep and delivered so quickly, it appears he had hardly come to his senses before the angel had him out of prison. Hence he thought it was a vision—something seen in a trance state, as when he saw the sheet let down.

When Paul was at Troas, it is said, "a (horama) vision appeared to Paul in the night; there stood a man of Macedonia, and prayed him, saying, come over into Macedonia and help us."—Acts 16: 9. The man did not actually go to Paul at Troas, that night, only in vision. In recording this event, Luke says, "After he had seen the (horama) vision, immediately we endeavored to go into Macedonia."—Acts 16: 10. The last example is in Acts 18: 9. When Paul was at Corinth, the Lord spake "to Paul in the night by a (horama) vision, be not afraid, but speak, and hold not thy peace."

It will be seen that the use of the word indicates that the (horama) vision on the mount was a supernatural appearance, like what John saw upon the isle of Patmos, when in a trance state; but the things seen in such a state do not have their accomplishment at that time; neither is it necessary that the objects seen should be actually present, only in appearance, as in the case of the vision seen by Peter, when the sheet was let down.

Taking this position, it would not be necessary that Moses and Elijah should actually be upon the mount in this (horama) vision, any more than it would be for the martyrs to be present when John saw them in vision centuries before they were born. John saw what would come to pass. So, upon the mount of transfiguration, Jesus showed his disciples a miniature representation of his coming kingdom. He appeared in a glorified state, and two of the saints as they will look in paradise restored. It may be said, "There appeared unto them [the disciples] Moses and Elias talking with him." So John heard the saints talking and singing who were unborn when he saw them.

But if it be contended that Moses and Elias were really present on the mount, then Moses must have been raised from the dead before this vision was seen. Elias, alias Elijah, was translated and did not see death, hence a resurrection was not needed in his case. We read in Jude 9 that "Michael the archangel" "disputed . . . with the devil" "about the body of Moses." It is not stated whether it was concerning his resurrection or not; but we think it might be a legitimate inference that this was the case. If so, no doubt, Michael gained the victory.

One thing should be observed in relation to the transfiguration scene, that there is nothing in it to favor the idea that it was the soul or spirit of Moses that was present. Either he appeared in vision as Peter, Paul and John saw things at times, or else he was actually present, having been raised from the dead.

"Panic and Distress.

In the proclamation for a "national fast" to be held Jan. 4th, 1861, President Buchanan says:—

"The union of the states is at the present moment threatened with alarming and immediate danger; panic and distress of a fearful character prevail throughout the land; our laboring population are without employment, and consequently deprived of the means of earning their bread. Indeed, hope seems to have deserted the minds of men. All classes are in a state of confusion and dismay, and the wisest councils of our best and purest men are wholly disregarded."

Yes, and the word of the Lord is also "wholly disregarded;" and even those who profess to be watchmen on the walls of Zion, take little or no heed to the "sure word of prophecy," consequently are walking in darkness, and do not see the awful storm that is now approaching. They are crying peace and safety, when "sudden destruction" is about to burst upon a guilty world. Only a few days since a popular minister was remarking that he expected the conversion of the world would begin next year! "Blind leaders of the blind." They do not see that "distress of nations with perplexity" is one of the last signs to be witnessed by a guilty world just before the coming of the Son of man. All things seem to be converging to one grand focus, which brings us the resurrection of the dead, and the complete overturn of all the governments of earth, the best of which are only a system of misrule and oppression, growing worse every year, and will till the Prince of peace returns. All efforts to make peace seem only to plunge each nation into worse difficulties, and render their political affairs more complex, till they arrive at a point, as says the President, where "the wisest councils of our best and purest men are wholly disregarded." Such is the condition of "free America!" Is is to be supposed that when a nation disregards the wisest councils of their best and purest men, that they will listen to the Lord? Certainly not. Does this look like the beginning of the conversion of the world? Only to Satan. Let every christian gird on his armor and boldly meet the embattled legions of the enemies of our King. Victory is sure to the faithful. Be strong in the Lord, and "fight the good fight of faith."

Preaching to the Poor.

Mr. Spurgeon has said some excellent things relative to the kind of preachers needed at the present day, and the best way of reaching the common people. Most preachers aim too high to reach those who are most easily affected by the gospel of the kingdom. They seem more anxious to be called "smart" by the rich and learned, than to bring poor sinners to Christ. Mr. Spurgeon says:—

"We need preachers who will study, not their shelves, but the streets and lanes; not paper and printing alone, but human nature in all its varied developments. The division between the ministry and the people is far too wide; they will never be moved by professional skill; the orator of the mass must be bone of their bone and flesh of their flesh. My own success, under God, is due to a sympathy with humanity, and an observant eye which delights rather to view man than man's works. This is not attainable by any amount of research among our learned tomes. We must walk the hospitals if we would be surgeons, and we must mingle with the people if we would reach their hearts. The language of the class room is not the speech of the people; and if we would be understood, we must leave our high stilts behind us, and walk on their level, thinking and speaking as one of themselves. We need converted prize fighters and regenerated burglars to reach their fellow criminals, and sweeps, cobblers, street sweepers, and such like, will be the right raw material for mighty preachers of the truth. Do not imagine that I deprecate a regular education; on the other hand, I own its utility; but for the vast mass something else is needed, and I have tried to indicate it."

GEN. 3: 24 — . . . And he placed at the east of the garden of Eden, cherubims, and a flaming sword, which turned every way, to keep the way of the tree of life."

I know nothing of the original languages, but, as a close student of the Bible, I would say, that in my mind, the idea of a sword is not in the original, and I will submit it to any good scholar if the following is not more in accordance with the original:—"And he placed at the end of the garden of Eden, cherubims, and a bright flame of waving fire (Shecinah) to preserve to the world a knowledge of the way of the tree of life." The Inheritance of the Saints.

"Blessed are the meek; for they shall inherit the earth."—Matt. 5: 5.

These words fell from our Master's lips when on the Mount with his disciples, showing them many glorious truths, at the same time, or immediately after, teaching them non-resistance and telling them if any man did smite them on the right cheek to turn the other also; and much other good instruction he revealed to their minds, but it will not be necessary to mention all; we are to comprehend, if possible, the import of these words—"The meek shall inherit the earth." They are of great importance, and how shall we understand them, unless we appeal to the Scriptures of divine truth, which we consider our only rule of faith and practice?

We most fully believe that these words uttered by our Lord, have not yet had their fulfillment. We will give our reason. None but the meek are mentioned; all other classes of persons were excluded. And when he said the meek shall inherit the earth, all the meek must have been included. Jesus was meek, Matt. 21: 5; and hence when the meek shall inherit the earth, Jesus will be included. We wish to show by this, that when Christ made this statement, he did not mean that the meek have, or do, inherit the earth, but they shall. He here used the future tense, showing that it is something to be realized in the future. We believe that when this promise is fulfilled and the work of God is wholly consummated, there will be none on the earth but the meek, all others will be banished from the presence of the Lord.—2 Thess. 1: 8, 9.

We candidly believe that this earth will be the eternal abode of the saints of God; we do not believe that the heavens are the inheritance of the saints, because they are not once introduced or promised in the word of God, and therefore not so affirmed; for the heavens, even the heavens are the Lord's, but the earth hath he given to the children of men.—Ps. 115: 16. We trace back to our first parents and find that the earth was given to man by his Creator.—Gen. 1: 26, 28. Adam was the man that God gave it to, but he lost it by his disobedience in the garden of Eden, and the devil came in possession of it; and it was in his possession in the days of Christ, when Jesus was led up of the Spirit into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil, when he "taketh him up into an exceeding high mountain, and sheweth him all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them," and saith unto him, "all these things will I give thee if thou wilt fall down and worship me."—Matt. 5: 1, 8, 9. Our blessed Lord did not dispute the statement thus made. The old deceiver wanted Jesus to submit to him, as did Adam; if he had, we should have been left without an inheritance, and been lost forever. But as he yielded not to Satan, he will redeem this earth and restore it again to its Eden beauty, as before man sinned, or more glorious. It will be paradise complete. The first Adam lost it; the second Adam, which is Christ, will restore it.—Acts 3: 19, 21. Jesus says himself, "I came to seek and to save that which was lost."—Luke 19: 11. What was lost? The inheritance. Man's life was lost. Jesus is also our lifegiver. "Ye are dead," says the Apostle, "and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory."—Col. 3: 3, 4.

It is a fact that the earth promised by God is to be the everlasting habitation of the seed of Abraham. Says the apostle Peter, "Nevertheless, we according to his promise look for a new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness"; or in other words, wherein righteous persons dwell. The Apostle here uses the phrase "new earth"; and the reason is, because this present earth is to be cleansed by fire; therefore, it will be called new, in the same manner that an individual is called a new creature when he puts on Christ: old things have passed away, and all things become new.

Some have advanced the idea that at some future period this earth will be utterly demolished and brought to naught; but such an idea is absurd; for we read in the book of Inspiration, "the earth abideth forever."—Eccl. 1: 4. How many there are who sneer at the doctrine of this earth being the future and eternal residence of the saints, and say, If this earth is the only inheritance that God has promised, it is not worth seeking for! But mark you, let some man of wealth offer such persons a piece of earth which lies under the curse, for a possession, and see how immediately the offer would be accepted. If such are not satisfied with the inheritance that God has promised in this present world, he will give it to those that are, when the fullness of times shall come. I fear there are more that will accept it than will be able to receive it. May we who are satisfied with the promises revealed in the Scriptures, live accordingly, that we may at last be permitted to be numbered with that company that shall sing the new song unto Him that liveth and was dead, saying, "Thou art worthy to take the book, and open the seals thereof; for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation, and hast made us unto our God kings and priests, and we shall reign on the earth."—Rev. 5: 9, 10.

Talk about Pens.

We never know the worth of blessings till we lose them. I have lately had an illustration of this fact. I am, you know, something of a scribbler; indeed, a man once said that he had thought me lazy, but he had changed his mind, for no lazy man could ever drive a quill so much as I did.

Well, I bought me a "Prince's Protean Fountain Pen" some two or three years since, which served for writing as a revolver does for fighting, enabling me to carry my ink in the pen-holder and write at the hotel, on the steamboat, in the depot, in the woods, in the parlor, or anywhere I chose. I could write eight or ten pages of foolscap with it without dipping it in the ink, and so, when it was once loaded I was ready for a journey of some length.

But a few months ago while on a journey I left my pen. Well, another would cost some $3, $4 or $5, and as money was not very plenty, I tried to do the best I could without the pen. But it was rather difficult, as you may suppose.

First: I tried borrowing ink where I traveled, getting all sorts and kinds, good, bad and indifferent, particularly the latter two,—and occasionally finishing my performances by scattering the ink or upsetting the inkstand upon the good lady's table-cloth,—a process which was well adapted to humble pride in me and cultivate patience in her.

Second: I undertook to carry a bottle of ink in my carpet-bag, and was not of course greatly surprised to find the bottle uncorked or broken amid my papers, books and clothing.

Third: I obtained a wooden, pocket inkstand, with a cap that screwed on the top. This kept the ink safe, I presume, for I filled it, screwed the top on and have never been able to get it off again. It is for sale cheap.

Fourth: I put a small vial of ink in my coat pocket and carried that with a paper round it, till one day the cork got out, and the ink ran down upon my clothes and I gave that up pretty much.

So I have nearly relinquished the job. I use David's blue ink, and I keep a bottle of it in every place where I expect to do much writing. But this is troublesome and expensive. Indeed, I know of nothing that will fill the place of Prince's Fountain Pen. And when I get rich, I intend to get me one, if the Lord will H. L. H.

☞ Some critics are like chimney-sweepers; they put out the fire below, and frighten the swallows from their nests above; they scrape a long time in the chimney, cover themselves with soot, and bring nothing away but a bag of cinders, and then sing from the top of the house as if they had built it.

Correspondence.

From Eld. Wm. Sheldon.

Bro. Grant:—Perhaps some of the friends of truth wonder why I have been so silent in the "Crisis." The truth is, my time is nearly all occupied in the discharge of important duties. I am preaching just as constantly as my health will permit me, with glorious results. I have four Sunday points at which I preach, excepting when pressing calls draw me to other localities, and during the week days I preach in new fields. My field is an extensive one. I ride on horseback, through all kinds of weather and storms, about two hundred and eighty miles every four weeks. As a general thing I preach about eight sermons per week. My preaching, for a few months past, has been mostly confined to Badaxe, Sauk, Columbia and Dane counties. The cause of Christ is fast gaining ground in Wisconsin.

I never felt more like doing all that I can for the Master than now. I fully believe that we are in a little circle of time in which our King will come. About six or eight years will carry us to the outer edge of the circle. Brethren, do we fully realize the solemn truth?

My calls for labor are numerous and urgent upon all sides. I have felt of late like exclaiming, "O for a thousand tongues" to proclaim the pure gospel! and I often feel like weeping when I am compelled to turn a deaf ear to the anxious cry,—"Come over and help us." I could keep several men employed in this region, if they could be supported. In most places I have full congregations, and earnest listeners; and also find many who joyfully embrace the truth, which greatly encourages me. In almost every new place, the sectarian priests faithfully warn their flock against us, but they soon liberate themselves from their restrictions, and come to hear. I had thought of writing you a condensed sketch of my labors in different localities, with the cheering results; but I do not find time after riding and visiting, and answering my private correspondents.

I am now preaching in Baraboo City Court house—a place of 4000 inhabitants. People have not turned out much yet, as the ministers in the place have been fortifying against us for four weeks past. One arranged to preach seven sermons against us beforehand, and another went at it without prescribing how much, fervently cautioning his friends to "beware of that oily tongued man who is scattering infidel tracts around the country interspersed with a few passages of Scripture." I intend to remain two weeks longer. Bro. Barnes is with me, and I expect that Bro. Turner and Bro. Smith will be here before long. My late discussion with a Campbellite minister is now being published in book form. It will contain thirty-two speeches. The price will be 40 cts. per copy. The propositions discussed were as follows:—

I. "Man has an immortal principle within him, which survives the stroke of death; in the Scriptures sometimes expressed by the term 'spirit,' sometimes by the term 'soul.'"

II. "Do the Scriptures teach the extinction of the life and conscious existence of the wicked after the judgment?"

As some of my friends still direct their letters to my old address in Minnesota, permit me again to say that my present address is Springville, Badaxe Co., Wis.

From Sr. C——.

Dear sisters in Christ, who are looking for Jesus soon to appear:—Are we doing all that we can to promote his cause? For one, I feel that I am not, and with two sisters have resolved to set apart one afternoon in every fortnight, (to commence Dec. 20th,) to work, the proceeds of which are to be sent to Bro. H. L. Hastings for the benefit of the Tract Fund and S. S. Mission.

With feeble health and limited circumstances we can do but little, but what we can do shall be done cheerfully. We would cordially invite the sisters to unite with us in this resolve, and we think much good might be accomplished. There are few so poor but that they might work a half day in two weeks, and if they cannot obtain the money, they can purchase a bundle of clothing material with their work.

Come, sisters, one and all, let us remember the time is short, and what we do must be done quickly. Let us not be weary in well doing, remembering that it is more blessed to give than to receive, and that he that soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly, but he that soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully.

From P. S. Deyo.

Bro. Grant:—Myself and wife left the 17th of Nov. to make a tour northwest, to fill some pressing calls in the Shell Rock River and Clear Lake City districts. With sad hearts we left the home that to us was dear and pleasant as earthly home could be, but now made sad and gloomy by death. But joy will come in the morning. Jesus will come and bring his reward with him. O yes! we will toil on a little while longer; the poor must have the gospel preached to them,—the people are starving for the word;—the Macedonian cry is on every side,—we must keep doing. Lord, help spread the gospel light!

We arrived at Marble Rock and preached the 21st. Found the brethren still prospering. Two had lately united under the gospel banner of liberty, and the 22d we commenced a series of meetings at Rock Grove, Floyd Co. This Grove is situated on the beautiful Shell Rock River, surrounded by a fine farming country. The church is small, has had much opposition from the sects around it. Here Brn. Cottrell and Phelps are trying to do what they can with the limited means they have. I preached fourteen times. Eight united with the church, four were baptized. The meetings increased in interest to the last; but as arrangements were made for a debate, I closed until the last week in Jan., 1861. The questions for discussion are—

1st. "Do the Scriptures teach the consciousness of the dead between death and the resurrection of the body"? John H. Fillmore affirms

2d. "Do the Scriptures teach that the wicked will be destroyed?" I affirm. The debate will last four days.

I am now at Mason City. This place is the county seat, situated on a pleasant prairie not far from the stream called Lime Creek, of about two hundred inhabitants, good buildings, well informed people, mostly from the East. I commenced here the 5th of Dec. There is no church of like precious faith. What will be the result of my labor here the Lord only knows.

I hope that the brethren will still write to me as usual where they want me to come, and those that have written, be patient,—I will do the best I can for you. My means are limited, but I will try and come around soon as I can. My conditions are as follows: a home provided for us, and a place to preach in. Almost any of the brethren living in the West can comply with them.

Mason City.

From H. G. McCullock.

Bro. Grant:—The Lord is reviving his work in this place. Tradition and mysticism are receding before the pure light of God's Word. Ministering brethren traveling on the Conn. River Railroad are requested to extend their appointments to this place. Leaving the cars at Greenfield, they will take the stage for Colerain, about four o'clock, which will bring them within two miles of this place, where they will be met by the brethren. Ministers coming to this place can inquire for Wm. Houghtaling or Nelson Sprague.

Colerain, Griswoldville, Mass.

From Elizabeth Collins.

Bro. Grant:—Prayer, as Christ teaches it in 18th Chap. of Luke from verses 1—8, shows us the need of earnest and fervent supplication night and day from his people; and Rev. 22d Chap. and the last clause of the 20th verse, shows us what the burden of prayer should be. But I fear there are many who profess to be looking for the blessed Savior who do not think of praying, "Come, Lord Jesus." It looks to me there must be a united cry day and night on this subject, and with as much earnestness as the widow manifested before the unjust judge.

I have no hope this side of the coming of Jesus; there all my hope centers. I can truly say with John Wesley,

> "The news of his coming I hear,
> And join in the catholic cry,—
> O Jesus, in triumph appear!
> Appear in the clouds of the sky!"

West Troy.

From Bro. C. B. Turner.

Bro. I. J. S. Oakfield, Genesee Co., N. Y.:—I rejoice to know that the body of Christ is so constituted that when one member suffers other members suffer with it. I saw that fact demonstrated on opening your letter. Thank you, dear brother, and would be glad to shake your hand at the same time; it came in a time when it was most needed. If I never meet you in this vale of tears, my prayer is that you may keep on the whole armor of God, for I desire to meet "I. J. S." in the kingdom.

Syracuse, Nov. 6th.

From Sr. H. J. Brown.

Bro. Grant:—It is a pleasure to me to add my testimony to all that has been said of the worth of our family paper, the "Crisis." It seems to increase in interest continually, and the spirit of love and faith which mark some, and careful thought and study, of others of its articles, and the able manner in which it is prepared, combine to make it, as one has said, the best religious paper in the country. I always look first to see the names with which I am familiar, and even more joy do I feel as they meet my eye, than the names of those bound to me by the ties of kindred. To us, as to many other lonely pilgrims, this paper is our meeting with those of like faith; here are our sermons—our class-meetings—our only exposition of the truth. May it continue to go forth as long as time lasts; gladdening the hearts of the weary, waiting band who are scattered far and wide, but called in one hope of his calling.

Brethren and sisters, suffer a word of exhortation from one personally unknown to most of you, and one of the least of all. My heart has been saddened to hear that even among the churches of those who are looking for the speedy coming of Jesus, there are strifes and divisions,—they have fallen out by the way,—Jesus is wounded in the house of his friends. Has Christ ceased to be precious to you that you thus dishonor him in the eyes of a guilty world, a careless church? Let contentions cease, and the best and wisest will be the first to forgive. Let the opening year bring you peace and that charity which "thinketh no evil, is not easily provoked," which beareth "long and is kind," and which if you do not possess, all your professions are but sounding brass. How unwise to risk all in unhallowed strife about names and honors. "Be ye all of one mind, be pitiful, be courteous; love as brethren." "For if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive you your trespasses."

Essex, Ct.

Obituary Notices.

Died, in East Boston, March 22d, of consumption, Bro. David H. Clark, aged twenty-four years.

Bro D. was sick a long time, which he bore with much patience. He gave good evidence, before and during his sickness, that he was united to Christ in the faith of the gospel. He looked with great interest to the time named by our Savior, when the saints are to be recompensed "at the resurrection of the just." He enjoyed the confidence, like Paul, that Jesus would give him a crown of life at his appearing. His faith was that though he should die, he should live again, when his Savior will raise him up at the last day; and so change the vile body, as that it shall be fashioned like unto his glorious body, when this mortal will put on immortality; when he will have the victory over death and the grave, to die no more.

Our Bro. has left a mother, brothers and sisters, to reflect on their loss, yet not without hope, for they too have the hope of the gospel, that their friend will live again, and that they with him will live forever in Christ's everlasting kingdom. J. S. White.

Lydia Jerusha Fike, daughter of Abraham and Mary Fike, was drowned in Feather River, Sacramento Valley, Cal., Friday, Oct. 5th, 1860, aged ten years and eleven days.

Our bereaved Bro. Fike is again called to mourn in the loss of his youngest daughter. They arrived in Sacramento Valley Sept. 30th, and stopped at the house of Mr. Wilson, whose wife had been so kind to his deceased wife on the plains. Here he obtained work at his trade (blacksmith) at $50 per month and boarded. On the fatal Friday named, Mrs. Wilson, with three of her children and Jerusha, set out to cross the river, in a light wagon, to get peaches. The ford is very dangerous, and can only be crossed in low water. She, being a stranger, drove too low, where the current is very swift, and waters deep, the wagon capsized and Jerusha, with two of her own dear children, perished in the waters, and were not recovered for ten and twelve days. Mrs. W and her son barely saved themselves. Thus,

> "The grave saith not it is enough."

The tender wife, the loving mother, the affectionate daughter, and loving and beloved little sister, are alike hidden away with remorseless grasp. But list, ye sorrowing ones! There is a voice of comfort rising far above this wail of woe. It is a voice from our Beloved,

> "Who saw our grief,
> And lo! he ran to our relief"

"And I saw a great white throne, and him that sat on it, from whose face the earth and heaven fled away, and there was found no place for them. And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God. . . And the sea gave up the dead which were in it, and death and hades or the grave gave up the dead which were in them, . . and death and hades were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death."

Thus their doom is fixed and the day of execution appointed. Amen saith the earth—mourners, in the blessed anticipation, "Amen. Blessing and glory, and wisdom and thanksgiving, and honor and power, be unto our God forever and ever. Amen"

E. S. Willard.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

The European (Liverpool) Times of the evening of the 7th says:

"The uncomfortable feeling created in monetary and commercial circles by the news from the United States is subsiding. The intelligence received by the steamers that have sailed from the Western Continent subsequently, to the departure of the Persia, is looked upon as reassuring—in fact that the climax was reached on the 20th. Nevertheless the arrival of the Canada, which dates to the 28th, is looked forward to, if not with anxiety at least with interest, as her advices are expected to be of such a nature as to further allay apprehension as to the necessity for more remittances of gold: for the efflux that has already taken place, some £400,000, has affected trade, and especially checked business in the produce markets. The Persia, to-morrow, is expected to take out specie to the amount of £200,000."

ITALY.

At Caserta, on the 28th Nov., a fight took place between the English volunteers and the Garibaldians, and resulted in loss of life on both sides. This led to the disbandment of the English Legion. Naples letters speak of the discredit thrown on the English name by the disgraceful proceedings of many of the volunteers and their officers.

SPAIN.

Madrid, Dec. 7.—To-day, while General O'Donnell was leaving the Senate, he was wounded on the shoulder by a pistol shot. The assassin, whose name is Imaz, was immediately arrested. He is known to be a man of extreme opinions.

OCCUPATION OF SYRIA.

Vienna, Dec 7th.—Endeavors are being made to bring about an understanding between England and France concerning the prolongation of the French occupation of Syria, which will not, however, take place without the acquiescence of the European Powers, and without being approved by another Conference at Paris.

FOUR DAYS LATER.

Pekin surrendered to the allies on the 13th of October, and yielded to all demands. The Emperor's summer palace was sacked, and enormous quantities of spoil taken. The Emperor and his Tartar army all fled, and no enemy was to be seen in Pekin.

A new and distinct rebellion was reported in the province of Sheari.

Affairs in Batavia were improving.

The Calcutta government has recommended the Bombay tariff for all India.

Victor Emmanuel returned to Naples on the 7th, where he will remain two weeks.

The siege of Gaeta continued, the new batteries working with terrible effect.

The Sardinians will await the fall of Gaeta before summoning the garrison of Messina to surrender, and will besiege it in case of refusal.

Agitation prevailed in the Danubian Principalities.

A dispatch from Pesth states that the Austrian Ministerial crisis was over.

The Garibaldians had suppressed disturbances in several places. The ringleaders were shot.

The Archbishop of Naples had been mobbed and his palace threatened. After eighteen hours of riot, the mob was appeased by the Archbishop bearing the tri-colors

It is reported that Napoleon had declared to the Bishop of Versailles with much sarcasm that the temporal power of the Pope must be put down.

Count Persigny, Minister of the Interior, has issued important circulars to the Prefects throughout France. One promises the utmost liberty to the press.

Italy.—The Pope's Financial Embarrassments.—The Roman correspondent of the Times, writing on the 27th ult., says: In their difficulties the Pope's ministers have, I understand, applied to the Rothschilds for aid. They were desirous that one of those eminent capitalists should undertake the arrangement of their finances, should put matters into as favorable a train as possible, and also to make an advance on resources hereafter to flow in. The agent to whom the application was made is reported to have said that the Mortara affair had very much indisposed the Jew to render any assistance to the Pope, but nevertheless he would see what could be done; and it is said that he ended by accepting the receipt of Peter's Pence as the basis of an operation. I know not whether it be on the strength of this that some of the Papal party have been heard to say that the treasury was solvent for the next six months. If this be true, which is doubtful, something must have been done to secure supplies, for those that were reckoned upon up to a very short time ago, were certainly not sufficient to carry on with for that period

The Distress in Kansas.—Gen. S. C. Pomeroy, the Chairman of the Committee for the distribution of the aid sent to Kansas, writes as follows in regard to the suffering and want that comes under his observation:

"No one of us has yet realized the distress, even now, of our people. More than fifty teams from the remote counties are camped in and about town, 'waiting for the cars to come in' We have had some delay in the trains, but I expect all the back cars loaded for this place will be in to-morrow.

But what is a car-load 'among so many?' Some men have waited here eight days, 'left their families with nothing but buffalo meat,' and 'dare not return without bread.'

I have not received a boot or shoe yet. Men come a long distance with home-made shoes of raw buffalo hide, and tell me their 'families have nothing' I have received one roll of cloth to-day from Galesburg by express 'free'—the first contribution. Galesburg and Knoxville continue to be first among the foremost What a good people they must be! When I told a good lady that Mr Burdett came all the way with his car-load, and saw such a demand for more that he went immediately back for another load, 'Ah,' said she, 'tell me his name again. I want to call my baby after him'

The weather begins to get cold. Ice is running in the river; the winds blow a piercing and mournful blast; every gale that sweeps across the prairie is full of tidings of sorrow. Little children are crying for bread; strong men, who look bold and defiant, will ask me out of my office to some retired corner, where they can tell me a tale of sorrow that would break down the proudest heart, always urging me not to tell or publish their case. Men who stand proudly among their fellows, will bow as tender and subdued as children when telling me of their 'last loaf of bread;' of the sick 'wife or child who can't eat corn meal,' and beg flour for the sick ones.

I have heard enough within one week to make a volume. I cannot write more."

The Secession.—Charlestown, Dec. 20.—The convention met to-day at 11 o'clock. Mr. Inglis reported the following ordinance:

"We the people of South Carolina, in convention assembled, do declare and ordain that the ordinance adopted by us in convention on the 23d of May, 1788, whereby the Constitution of the United States was ratified, and all acts or parts of acts of the General Assembly of this State ratifying the amendments to said Constitution, are hereby repealed, and the Union now subsisting between South Carolina and the other States, under the name of the United States of America, is hereby dissolved."

The ordinance was passed unanimously by 169 members, at a quarter past one o'clock.

The news spread rapidly, and a crowd collected amid immense cheering.

The ordinance was ordered to be engrossed on parchment, and be signed by the President and members at half-past six o'clock this evening, at Institute Hall, and to be placed in the archives of the State.

☞ A remarkable religious interest in London is noticed by some of the newspapers of that city. It is said to resemble that of which so much has been heard within the last year in Ireland. On the 2d inst., Exeter Hall was crowded—one of the principal speakers having been formerly a noted pugilist.

Married.

In Blackstone, Mass., on the 16th of Dec., by Eld. M. R. Phetteplace, Mr. James C. Engley and Mary M. Turner, both of Blackstone.

Notices, &c.

Life of Hiram Munger.

A second edition of the above work is now in the hands of the printer, and will be ready about the first of the new year. In addition to what has been published in the first book, there is a large appendix, containing some deeply interesting items regarding the trials and persecutions to which the pioneers of the Advent faith were subjected; beside a number of valuable recipes for various maladies. Also, a life-like portrait will accompany this edition. Owing to the extra expense, the price will be 60 cents; postage 8 cts. Our friends will please send in their orders soon, as we anticipate a rapid sale of the book.

Protracted Meeting.

Providence permitting, there will be a protracted meeting held in the Ziba Olney schoolhouse in Gloucester, R. I., three miles east of Chepachet, on the old road, to commence Dec. 27th and continue over the Sabbath. Bro. Eleazer Bellows is invited to attend.

Notice.

The church in Foster, R. I., design holding a watch meeting the 31st of Dec., 1860. Bro. A. Durfee is expected to be present to preach the word. The brethren are invited to attend. H. O. Hopkins.

Quarterly Conference.

The next session of the Western Central Quarterly Conference will be held in South Livermore, Me., Thursday, Jan. 3d, at 1 o'clock, P. M., and continue over Sunday.

Brethren and sisters are invited to attend to worship God, and labor unitedly for the upbuilding of his cause. Call on Brn. E. Safer, Silas Timberlake, C. Dunning, D. M. Hanscomb, Charles Boothby

I. C. Wellcome, Scribe.

Four Days' Meeting.

If the Lord will, there will be a meeting held at Campville, Ct., commencing Thursday evening, Dec. 27th, and continuing over Sunday. Bro. H. L. Hastings is expected to be present, and as many other preaching brethren as can make it convenient to attend.

Brethren and sisters in adjoining towns are invited to come in the name of the Lord, full of faith, and praying that the blessing of God may rest upon the people. Brethren coming will do well to provide their own food, as the brethren have no conveniences for boarding.

A. Elliott,
J. Hine,
Chas. Goodrich,
L. G. Humphreville.

Change of Time for Yarmouth Meeting.

The brethren and sisters in this place, feeling anxious to make extra efforts to save souls and help along the cause of the Lord in this vicinity, propose having a protracted meeting in "Institute Hall," commencing Jan. 18th, 1861, at 6 1-2 o'clock in the evening, and continuing as long as may be thought best. Brethren O. R. Fassett, and other ministering brethren are expected to be present to preach the word; and we cordially invite brethren and sisters generally, to come to the meeting to labor together for the good of souls. We shall do what we can to take care of all who come. In behalf of all interested, R. R. York.

Yarmouth, Me., Dec. 3d, '60.

☞ There will be a Quarterly Conference of the Advent Christian Association holden at Hesper, Winneshiek County, Iowa, commencing on Friday, 2 o'clock, P. M., Jan. 4th, and continuing over Lord's day.

ESPECIAL BOOK NOTICE. English Bibles.

We have just received a well assorted selection of genuine English Bibles, the prices of which we affix below. Having paid cash for them, we get them at the lowest prices, and therefore can afford to sell them for cash at the lowest retail rates. Please send in your orders, which shall be promptly attended to.

A Proposition.

To any one who will send us a new subscriber for one year, we will forward, post paid, a copy of our late discussion with Eld. W. W. Clayton, on the conscious state of the spirit after death, and the destruction of the wicked. And for a new subscriber for six months, we will send a copy of the pamphlets on "Soul" and "Spirit." With a little effort, a thousand names may be added to our list. Let every reader try to aid in scattering the light and truth. Now is the time to work.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brn. that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday Morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

Providence permitting, I will preach at Castleton, Vt., Dec. 30th. Also commence a series of meetings at Glens Falls, N. Y., Friday evening, Jan. 4th, to continue one week or more, as thought best. MILES GRANT.

H. L. Hastings will preach in Plainville, Ct., Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, Jan. 1st and 2d, in the Methodist Chapel.

For the Crisis.

There'll be no Sorrow there.

Beyond this gloomy night
Eternal beauties rise,
A land of love, a land of light,
Unseen by mortal eyes.

Chorus.—There 'll be no sorrow there:
There 'll be no sorrow there:
When Jesus comes, and all get home;
There 'll be no sorrow there.

The land of promise this,
Long hoped for by the good;
A scene of everlasting bliss,
The price of Jesus' blood.

No sin nor sorrow there
Shall cause the saved a tear;
We gain the second Eden fair,
When Jesus shall appear.

This is the land of life,
Where death is known no more;
Saints ever rest, now free from strife,
Their present labors o'er.

The signs proclaim Him near,
"Whose right it is" to reign;
Lift up the voice with lofty cheer,
Soon Jesus comes again.

"The Coming Storm."

Under the above heading, we find the following, in an English periodical called "The last Vials." The writer is a close observer of the signs of the times. Although we may differ with him on some points, his remarks deserve a careful perusal. He says:—

The state of public affairs at present confirms what has been anticipated in the "Vials" ever since the year 1846, while the anticipations of peace and "moral progress," which our philosophers and newspapers have so confidently announced, have proved entirely fallacious. For the last forty-five years the world has been rushing on like a runaway horse that has broken loose from its rider. It fancied itself free because it had broken loose from God,—and now, spent and exhausted, it finds itself engulphed in the quagmire of confusion! What has been the result of all our associations, our science, our education-schemes, our peace-societies, and our uproar of improvement?—that we are now on the verge of universal war, and worse than war, of a Republican revolution;—that we are engulphed in a quagmire of confusion. If we struggle on, a precipice is before us; and to turn back is as impossible in the course of nations as in the course of time. Nothing now, but a miracle, can save the world.

It is no easy matter to discover the fixed point on which the destinies of nations are now revolving—or the result of those vehement revolutions; but we think the fixed point will prove to be the intellectual power of a SINGLE MIND; and the result will be the resurrection of a DEPARTED EMPIRE. Hitherto the progress of events has confirmed what has been said in these pages, and has woefully contradicted our public press, which had foretold everything that has not happened. First, an era of peace was foretold, and the progress was contradicted by war. Next, we were told that the prime mover of that war was perplexed, defeated, mad, dying, at his wits' end: while, all the time, he was advancing his designs with profound skill, and imperturbable resolution, and making all mankind his instruments or his playthings. We stand at present on the verge of a new era, or rather at a narrow opening, through which we can steal a glimpse of the second chamber of mystery and blood. Within that chamber many strange forms are seen, and many a deadly deed is about to be perpetrated.

In the first place, if we look to the seven-hilled city we see a remarkable development of prophetic events. The most determined sceptic can no longer deny that the 17th of Revelation is exactly realized in the position of the Papal throne. The 17th of Revelation describes a woman sitting on the seven-headed beast, which implies, of course, that the woman rules, or at least directs, the beast, and, at the same time, is supported by the beast. The seven heads, we are told, are seven mountains on which the woman sitteth; and as the interpretation which the angel gives must be literal, or else it would be no interpretation at all, it follows that a city built upon seven hills must literally be meant. Now, as Babylon the Great means the apostate Roman Empire regarded as a territory, so the woman meant the apostate Roman Empire regarded as a system of Religion; and, as a matter of course, the man who is at the head of a system is the representative of the system itself. But we must recollect that the woman is not alone. She is called the "mother of harlots" which implies beyond all doubt that there are many apostate churches besides the church of Rome. In fact every established church upon earth is apostate at this day; and all the churches of christendom are the "harlots" of which Rome is the "mother." The parent of this hopeful offspring is in the exact position described in the 17th of Revelation. Represented by the individual called the Pope, the Roman Church is seated on the beast—being supported altogether by the external power of an apostate empire. There might formerly have been some doubt, but now there can be none, that the papal throne is sustained altogether by the power of the French Empire, since the Pope has not even a house over his head, much less a kingdom, except through the patronage of France. Yet France, at the same time, is directed by the "woman;" for the Emperor has not advanced so far as to throw off the yoke of superstition, nor would his throne be secure were he to announce himself independent of Rome in matters spiritual and ecclesiastical. He still clings to the title of "Eldest Son of the Church," and in virtue of that title he is spiritually subject to the Pope. The position of affairs is therefore accurately described in the 17th of Revelation—the woman rides upon the beats: the church of Rome, in its representative, the Pope, is supported by the empire. We have so often spoken of this before that it is only now introduced to point out the character of the present era; and to show that we may be living in the very time denoted by the 17th of Revelation; or, at least, that we are on the verge of such a time.

At the same moment we observe another most important sign of the last days; and one which the most obstinate opponent cannot look upon without being shaken,—the FRENCH EXPEDITION to the East. Many years ago, early in 1853, the "Vials" spoke of the French Emperor as having his eyes fixed upon the East. We especially named Damascus, Acre, and Carmel, as three of the stages of his military route. After nearly eight years, those expectations have been literally fulfilled. While we write, the French army is advancing to Damascus, and to the slopes of Lebanon, on the borders of the Holy Land. A few marches further will conduct that army to the heart of Palestine, to Acre, Carmel, and Jerusalem. Some one, for some special end, excited the Christians against the Druses, and the Druses against the Christians. A dreadful massacre ensued, reminding one of the darkest scenes of the middle ages: more atrocious, far, and far more widely spread, than the "Sicilian Vespers" of the thirteenth century. The Emperor Napoleon lost not an instant: he seized the opportunity, and demanded permission to send a military force to Syria. The poor bewildered governments of England and the continent pretended to object; the great Emperor, partly out of pity, and partly out of decency, pretended to listen to their objections: but it was all pretence. We dared not oppose him; and he disdained to lend an ear to our objections. Each power agreed to send its "contingent" to the East; the treaty was signed and sealed; but when it came to be executed, not one man was contributed by any power except France.

The Syrian expedition is composed wholly of French troops. Six thousand were to be the utmost contributed by any one power. France has now 12,000 men in Syria, to her own share; while we have nothing but the marines of our fleet, who cannot advance one march beyond the guns of our ships. To those 12,000 men the French can add, when they please, the whole Arab cavalry under the influence of Abd-el-Kader, who is devoted soul and body to the Emperor; they can add the whole Christian population of Syria and Lebanon; and they can, if necessary, summon the whole Egyptian army of 200,000 men to their assistance: for the Pacha of Egypt, like Abd-el-Kader, is devoted to the Emperor Napoleon. The French, also, themselves, can send out detachments from time to time, until their own forces shall be raised to full three times the amount stipulated for by the treaty. Thus we shall find, whenever the occasion presents itself, a force of not less than 300,000 men, enveloping the East, besieging its fortresses, occupying its strong positions, absorbing its revenues, under the command of the ablest officers of France, Egypt, and Arabia; and all devoted heart and soul to the supreme will of Napoleon the Third. Napoleon the Third is master of the East—the deed is done! while our newspapers are swaggering about our national preponderance, while our Foreign Secretary is inditing protocols of tremendous sound, and our Parliament is wrangling about some paltry question of home policy. What the First Napoleon could not effect, with all his genius and with forty thousand men, has been effected by the third Napoleon by a single turn of his hand, and without even being personally present on the spot. He has avenged the defeat of Acre, and neutralized the victory of the Nile. God has raised up no Pitt or Nelson to resist the progress of another Napoleon; but has justly left us to ourselves, since we have only abused his former mercies for the purpose of boasting, ambition, and avarice. The public press has become wilfully blind. It is conscious that we have been defied and intimidated by the French Emperor; it feels that he has outmanœuvred us in the East; but is afraid to utter even a single whisper of the truth. So we shall continue wilfully blinded until the subjugation of the East shall be formally completed, and we shall then have another fit of impotent rage, as in the case of Nice and Savoy. The Emperor advances in silence, and seizes everthing in succession. We stand still to gather our breath for a scream, and when our scream is over, our adversary is out of sight, and we are stuck fast in the mire just where we were before!

It is also to be observed with what skill this invasion of the East has been conducted. We left the unfortunate Christians to be robbed and murdered, with scarce any interference upon our part; France instantly rushed to their aid. We avenged our own countrymen in India twenty-fold; but hardly raised a finger to avenge our fellow Christians in Syria. We are heard througout all the East as the DESTROYERS of one million human lives; France is heard of only as the SAVIOR. Destruction is engraved upon our sword; protection upon the sword of France. The result will be, that all the Mohammedan nations will rally round the standard of the French Emperor, while all will most justly turn against ourselves. Never have we set our foot upon any Mohammedan shore except in the character of aggressors, spoilers, and homicides; never, unless when we had, as in the Crimean war, some obvious interest of our own. When a country that makes a profession of the purest christianity, which glories in its superiority to Popish superstition, when such a country is known through half the world only as a spoiler, an aggressor, a shedder of blood, what must be the result?—That we shall have made Protestantism an abomination to mankind, and made Popery, by contrast, appear to the unenlightened heathen a religion of mercy. The words of Nathan may be justly applied to ourselves, and to our policy in the East:—"By this deed thou hast given great occasion to the enemies of the Lord to blaspheme." By hypocrisy upon our part we have crept into Eastern empire; by hypocrisy on the part of others we shall lose it.

The occupation of Syria by French arms is not a mere ordinary event, either political or military: it appears to be nothing less than a prophetic epoch. The French being in possession of Damascus, a few marches eastward would bring them down upon the Euphrates, upon Chaldea, and upon the site of ancient Babylon. A few marches southward would bring them to Jerusalem and Hebron. Their present advance puts them in possession of the magnificent heights and impregnable strongholds of Lebanon. Every step they take, they tread upon holy earth, and are surrounded by the immortal scenery of Holy Writ. Prophetic ground and prophetic names surround them upon all sides, and every day's march leads them further on within the mysterious circle of the "last times." Some future outbreak will give them an excuse for this advance—an excuse for occupying Acre,—an excuse for looking in at Jerusalem,—an excuse for lining the banks of the Euphrates with their troops, and getting the command of its navigation. All this is more than probable, and within a very short time. But should the Pope be persuaded to fly from Rome and to take refuge in Jerusalem, we shall witness one of the most remarkable events connected with the last days. France is the eldest son of the Pope, and has long been the exclusive defender of the Pope. Should the Pope take up his residence at Jerusalem, the French Emperor, as his eldest son, will be bound, in decency, to provide him with a guard of honor. That guard will be not only sufficiently numerous for purposes of state, but strong enough to hold Jerusalem in the name of Napoleon. Jerusalem will then belong to France, the way will be fully opened for the Jews, and the Emperor will become, at the same moment, and on the same spot, the protector both of Popery and Judaism, as well as master of the Holy Land. He is already in the closest connexion with the Arabs under Abd-el-Kader, and with the Egyptian government; all their troops are at his disposal; the occupation of Jerusalem and the Holy Land is only a question of time; and then—the Jews being restored under French patronage—the stage will be completely prepared for enacting the last scene, and even for the appearance of the last great actor. Should the Pope retire to Jerusalem, he will be in the exact position for performing his part as the "second beast" of the 13th of Revelation, and for compelling men to worship the image of the "first beast." We do not assert that such events must necessarily be at hand; but it cannot be denied that every thing is leading on to them, and, apparently, with the utmost rapidity. "The end of all things draweth nigh; be ye therefore sober, and watch unto prayer."

In the 13th of Revelation we find two persons indicated by the symbols of beasts. The second beast is subordinate to the first, and acts as his pontiff, or high-priest. Deities have their priests, so must antichrist when he sets up for a God; and the second beast is described as acting the part of priest in the new and last apostasy of the world. The eighth head and his ten horns destroy the woman; which means that the antichrist and his ten kings will overturn the apostate churches of christendom. When the church of Rome, among the rest, has been overturned, what is to become of the Pope? He cannot altogether disappear; he cannot at once relinquish his long-accustomed supremacy as spiritual head of so many millions; he can hardly bring himself to subside into nonentity. With the flexibility which has always distinguished the church of Rome, he will abandon his old form, and assume a new one. He will bend to the influence of the eighth head, and become his agent and high-priest; and should he find himself at Jerusalem when the revolution occurs, he will then be placed in the exact position which prophecy seems to require. He will be in the position to compel the Jews to worship the first beast, and to persecute and kill all who resist. In any case, it is probable that the second beast of Revelation will be the POPE under a new form. In the case of the Pope being transferred to Jerusalem, the probability would be increased almost to a certainty; and for this reason the ultimate decision of the future residence of the Pope becomes a subject of interest far beyond what appears to belong to it at first sight.

For the Crisis.

The Bride's Lament.

While pensive, and sadly alone,
I sigh for my long absent Lord,
Through a starless and perilous night I have come,
Relying alone on h s word.

Long years have I wandered forlorn,
Down-trodden, and tempted, and tried,
With garments and tresses disheveled and torn,
Betrothed to a Lord crucified.

Other lords, with vain offers, have tried
To allure me from Him I adore,
But my love remains constant for Him who hath died,
But liveth for me evermore.

I once had companions to sigh,
Who professed in his love still to share,
But alas! when I warned them his coming was nigh,
They turned a deaf ear to my prayer.

Our Lord quickly left when he ceased
To knock at our palace of pride, Cant. 5, 2.
And bid me a place in the wilderness seek, Hos. 2: 14.
A place in the wilderness hide;

There rear him a house for his own,
And gather the meek in his name,
And in the midst of the years he'd surely make known Hab. 3: 2.
The time of his coming again.

A day star of promise shall rise
To unite all his children in love,
To raise in his mountain an ensign of life, Zech. 9: 16.
Till the vail be removed from above. Is. 25: 7.

I have come to this mount of his love,
Where he bids me assemble his bride,
Ere vengeance vindictive descend from above,
And smite all his foes in their pride.

Though I dwell in this mount, yet I mourn
And long for his coming to see,
To be changed to a glorifi d, heavenly form,
And to be from corruption set free.

By faith in his word I rejoice,
Yet languish to meet his embrace,
To hear the glad sound of his musical voice,
To see the sweet smiles of his face;

To taste of his life-giving love,
The moisture impressed from his lips;
With rapture enchanted, the lone mourning dove
Anticipates pleasures like this.

Then haste thee, our own blessed King,
Arrayed in thy regal attire,
We hold out our hand for Eternity's ring, *
To unite us, our only desire.

A Wife's Remorse

"Sick again!" said the heedless wife, with petulance—"I'm so tired of seeing a pale face from morning till night, of hearing groans, of mixing doses. It seems to me there is little need of this constant giving up—why don't I give up?"

"Mary, Mary," cried a quivering voice.

"Coming, coming," replied the woman. "O! dear, how I have to run. He's so impatient, and I must always be there; men ought never to be sick, they make so much trouble."

There was but little tenderness in the voice that answered the faint queries of the sick man, and yet Mrs. Nash was not a hard-hearted or an unfeeling woman. Her character leaned somewhat to the side of selfishness, and being in robust health, she had no knowledge of the heart-weaning that continual pull-backs cause to men of the strongest wills.

"O dear," sighed the man, half childishly, "it seems as if my head never did ache as it does now."

"I've heard you say that a hundred times," said Mrs. Nash, not in the softest manner.

"But I'm sure it's worse—if you'll only pull the curtain down—the least light strikes through my eyes even when they are shut."

"Up again," thought the wife, rising somewhat impatiently, scattering her work with some noise as she did so, and, heedless of the groan that followed, she let the blind fall heavily.

"I'm a great deal of trouble," said the sick man, seeing the cloud on his wife's brow.

"O! no,"—her face cleared up—"you're notional, of course; all men are—men don't know what sickness is, and they're so frightened at the least pain."

"But this is terrible!" cried the invalid, pressing his closed eyelids together.

O, how he longed to have some soothing hand upon his temples!—but he would not ask his wife, because he saw that she had snatched up her sewing and was again absorbed in its completion.

Hours passed, and the pulse leaped madly, the eyes grew strained and crossed with veins, the temples fluttered with the throbbing flesh and strange words came thickly on the stillness of the chamber.

Mrs. Nash had been down stairs preparing supper; she had just laughingly said, in reply to a neighbor's question concerning her husband—

"O! going to die! as all you men are, if you happen to cut your finger."

Little she thought how true the prophecy she so unthinkingly uttered. In another moment her eldest son came into the room.

"Isn't it funny" he cried, "pa don't know me. He called me Mr. Morris, and asked if I had that will all made out."

"What do you mean, child?" His mother paused in the midst of her work.

"He don't know me, because I kept calling pa, and he would look at me so strange, and keep asking if I had that will all made out."

Her cheek paling a little, Mrs. Nash hurried up to the chamber above. Her husband was talking wildly to himself, and his appearance had changed frightfully. Now seriously alarmed, she sent for the physician, who was all wonder that he had been called at so late an hour.

"The man must have shown symptoms of more than ordinary distress, this morning," he said—"did he make complaints of nothing but an ordinary headache?"

The wife was forced to confess that the symptoms had been unusually severe, but he was so liable to these attacks that she didn't think much of it. Her heart, however, condemned her. She was conscious that the moans and complaints of her poor, sick husband had irritated her to an unusual degree, and that she had borne far from patiently with him. Now she was ready to make all amends. With tears and loving thoughts she hovered over that sick bed, accusing herself—as every wild cry for her rang out, and still there was no consciousness, still he felt not the kind hand, saw not the streaming eyes—of being the cause of all his wretchedness through her selfish neglect.

Tears, hot and copious, wild prayers to heaven, sweet and fervent words of love availed nothing. The death-hour came, and with it consciousness. Arrows could not have pierced that sad heart as did the last words of the dying man—

"Dearest, you have been a good wife to me."

The meek face looked calmly white amidst the casements of the grave, but it was scarcely whiter than the face that bent over it. O! what would that wretched heart have given to recall those cold, careless words that were ringing in her own ears at every step. This was the thought that gave her anguish unparalleled, as her trembling steps led her to his open grave—as she looked her last upon the dear, manly face that had ever a smile for her, O! to live with this consciousness! to bear a burden so heavy—these were to be her punishment.

"If I had been tender to him that day"—she often sobbed out, as she accused herself—"if I had only kissed the hot brow, and bathed it more carefully—if I had only put down that feeling that I would not humor his fancied indisposition, I would give worlds." But the sorrow, dreadful as it was, has not been without its salutary influence. Now the widowed woman is the welcome visitor by the bedside of the sick. Her gentle voice soothes as the voice of a mother—her hand's touch is like the pressure of velvet, her very sympathy is as the sweetest cordial. And if ever she is tempted to think an impatient thought or give expression to a selfish wish, there comes up before her the vision of a pale face that, but for her neglect, might be smiling on her now—and with the rebuke working patience in her heart, she goes about her Master's work.—Mother's Journal.

Bards of the Bible.

The following passages occur in "Gilfillan's Bards of the Bible."

The Bible is a mass of beautiful figures; its words and its thoughts are alike poetical; it has gathered around its central truths all natural beauty and interest; it is a temple with one altar and one God, illuminated by a thousand varied lights, and studded with a thousand ornaments. It has substantially but one declaration to make, but it utters it in the voices of the creation.

Shining forth from the excellent glory, its light has been reflected in a myriad of intervening objects, till it has become at length attempered for our earthly vision. It now beams upon us at once from the heart of man and the countenance of nature. It has arrayed itself in the charms of fiction. It has gathered new beauties from the works of creation, and new warmth and new power from the very passions of clay. It has pressed into its service the animals of the forest, the flowers of the field, the stars of heaven,—all the elements of nature. The lion spurring the sands of the desert, the wild roe leaping over the mountains, the lamb led in silence to the slaughter, the goat speeding to the wilderness, the rose blossoming in Sharon, the lily drooping in the valley, the apple-tree bowing under its fruit, the great rock shadowing a weary land, the river gladdening a dry place, the moon and the morning star, Carmel by the sea, and Tabor in the mountains, the dew from the womb of the morning, the rain upon the mown grass, the rainbow encompassing a dark place, the light God's shadow, the thunder his footsteps,—all such varied objects are made as if naturally designed from their creation, to represent him to whom the book and all its emblems point. Thus the spirit of the book has ransacked creation to lay its treasures on Jehovah's altar, united the innumerable rays of a far streaming glory on the little hill of Calvary, and woven a garland for the bleeding brow of Immanuel, the flowers of which have been culled from the garden of a universe. The power of the Bible over man has been long and obstinately resisted; but resisted in vain. For ages has this artless, loosely piled little book been exposed to the fire of the keenest investigations, a fire meanwhile which has consumed contemptuously the mythology of the Iliad, the husbandry of the Georgics, the historical truth of Livy, the fables of the Shaster, the Talmud and the Koran, the artistic merit of many a work of philosophy and science. And yet there the Bible lies unhurt, untouched with not one of its pages singed, with not even the smell of fire having passed upon it. Many an attempt has been made to scare away this fiery pillar of our wanderings, to prove it a mere natural product of the wilderness; but still night after night rises, like one of the sure and ever shining stars in the vanguard of the great march of man, the old column gliding slow, but guiding certainly to future lands of promise, both in the life that is, and that which cometh hereafter.

While other books are planets shining with reflected radiance, this book, like the sun, shines with ancient and unborrowed rays.

Other books, after shining their little seasons, may perish in flames fiercer than those which destroyed the Alexandrian library; this must in essence remain fine as gold, but inconsumable as asbestos in the general conflagration.

☞ Friendship is the only thing in the world concerning the usefulness of which all mankind are agreed.

Attending Public Worship.

There is a growing tendency to neglect public worship, or to give half the day to the sanctuary, and the other half to ease or relaxation. Every christian ought to resist this tendency, and give the whole force of his influence and example to a regular attendance on the ordinances of God's house. A western pastor, in a published sermon says:

"It is needful to create an overwhelming public sentiment in favor of attending public worship so that, as in Scotland, a man would feel ashamed to absent himself from the house of God. This may be done in various ways. First, by the steady and undeviating example of those whose consciences are right on this subject. What I mean is, that they should never without good reasons, absent themselves from public worship, or suffer their families to be absent. I mean, that as often as the church bell rings, they should march to its music in solid column to the house of God. People are more influenced by fashion than principle. They love to go with the crowd. They admire a great congregation. Let every sitting in a house of worship be occupied, and you may be sure they will be almost beside themselves to obtain church accommodations. So much are we the creatures of imitation. Now, drops make the rivers and rivers the ocean. Every man and every child that is faithful in his attendance on the means of grace, helps to swell the current of public sentiment in that direction."

VICE NEUTRALIZING VIRTUE.

He that a vice from year to year inherits,
Wieldeth an ax against his tree of merits.

The Family.

The family circle is God's blessed ordinance, and is the sweetest, the happiest, and the most hallowed spot on earth. It is the nursery of affection, of friendship, and of virtue; the place where those ties of mutual dependence and help are first formed, which, in their expanded state, unite human society; and according to the manner in which the rights of the family circle are enjoyed, its duties discharged, and its true benefits realized, are the moral character, the stability, and the grandeur of a country.

CHRISTIAN UNION.—"Sir, I have tried to be sectarian. I can't be. I have labored to work out the principles on which people spend their lives in building up dividing fences between themselves and neighbors. But, sir, I have always found that a summer spent in building fences brings a winter of starvation, without a crop. I prefer to think of those things in which as christians we are united, and they constitute the whole truth which is necessary to save us from sin.—Dr. Tyng.

"THIS IS FOR YOUR HEALTH."—Paul.

Physical Strength.

Dr. Winship, who is noted for his muscular strength, gained by physical exercise, recently gave a lecture on the subject, at the Meionaon, in Boston, in which he remarked that if we would improve our physical strength, among other things, we should be careful to breathe in fresh air with the head up, chest extended, and shoulders down; but not to exert one's self when passing through foul air. We should sleep in a room through which there is a draft of air, after getting gradually accustomed to it; exercise with dumb bells, or something similar, every day or two, or three times a week, from twenty to forty minutes a day; avoid all adulterations, and everything that has come in contact with zinc, lead or other poisonous substances.—ED.

What we need to Eat.

Eating is one of the necessities of life; but when, what, and how much we should eat, every man must settle for himself, since the savans have failed to agree upon any system. If we are governed by appetite, and the sense of taste, stimulated by all the refinements and inventions of gastronomy, we are very likely to err on the side of gluttony, and bring upon ourselves serious diseases. If, on the other hand, we are too abstemious—but there is so little danger of that, we need not take time to enlarge upon it.

Even the experienced trainers of the prize-ring cannot decide what is the best food for training men up to their greatest powers of endurance. In England, they have a prejudice in favor of mutton chops and underdone beef-steaks; but it is by no means sure that this is best. The Roman soldiers, who conquered the world, and built roads from Lisbon to Constantinople, and who were all trained athletes, marching under a weight of armor and luggage that few men in our day could carry, lived on coarse brown wheat or barley bread, which they dipped in sour wine.

In our own day, the Spanish peasants are among the most agile men in the world. One of them will not hesitate to take a mad bull by the horns. He will work all day in a copper mine, or at the olive press, or the wine press, under a hot sun, and then dance half the night to the music of a guitar. What does he live on? A piece of black bread, an onion, perhaps half a water-melon. You may see him dipping his piece of bread into a horn of olive oil, and then into some vinegar made hot with pepper and garlic, and he is happy. Sometimes he gets a draught of harsh, sour wine, but not strong. All the strong wine is sent to England.

The Smyrna porter walks off with a load of 800 weight. His only food, day after day, is a little fruit—a handful of dates, a few figs, a bunch of grapes, some olives. He eats no beef, pork, or mutton. His whole food does not cost him a penny a day. And the climate of the south of Spain, or of Smyrna, where the plague is almost endemic, cannot be considered better than ours.

The Coolie, living on his rice, can outwork the Negro fed on bacon. The Arab, living on rice and dates, conquered half the world.

Not only may the most tremendous muscular force and great powers of endurance be nourished upon a very light vegetable diet, but great mental energies as well. For example, St. Gregory Nazienza lived on bread, herbs, and salt. The great St. Ambrose of Milan, lived in rigorous abstinence, and seldom broke his fast before noon. St. Chrysostom, called on account of his eloquence the Golden-mouthed, ate one meal a day of bread and herbs. St. Augustine lived on pulse and herbs. St. Bernard, the ablest and most influential man in Europe in the twelth century, lived on coarse bread softened in warm water; and great numbers of the ablest and most eminent men, in all times, have lived in great abstinence.

We eat too much. Many people eat breakfast, lunch, dinner, tea, supper—five meals a day, and four of them hearty ones, with various kinds of flesh meat, and prepared dishes. A majority of Americans eat flesh three times a day. Irish laborers, who never ate flesh a dozen times in their lives, come here rosy with health and strong as oxen. They fall into the habits of the country—eating pork, and drinking tea, coffee, and whiskey—and in two or three years they lose their rosy cheeks, their clear, bright eyes, their strength and endurance. They have sallow skins, bad teeth, and rheumatism. They lay it to the climate. It is to attributed far more to the change in their habits of eating and drinking. If Irishmen who come here, would live just as they do at home, they would not complain of the climate. The smartest Irishwoman we know of—a little woman who can roll a barrel of flour up to a room in the third story, and walk ten miles, without prejudice to a hard day's work—has not tasted meat for twenty years, and lives every day on a little bread, and a pennyworth of milk boiled up with a very weak cup of coffee.

Our sanitary reformers have not looked to the diet question; will they allow us to call their attention in that direction? The stomach is the centre and citadel of organic life. It is worth a little consideration, as well as the lungs and skin, which depend upon it.—N. Y. Weekly.

For the Crisis.

Short Dress.

The short dress has been worn from time immemorial; probably ever since the Lord made garments of skin to clothe Adam and Eve. Why the long dress should ever be adopted, as it has been, by infidel France and "Young America," is a matter of surprise. The practice of sweeping the streets in long dresses, in filth, mud, tobacco and all, might have had its origin in the mock sanctity of Romanism.

There are those who dare regard their health, and make themselves comfortable in their dress, in opposition to the false delicacy of the majority.

This dress has been worn in various places in this country for many years past. It was adopted in a community not forty miles from Boston, several years before some other places, where it is now worn, and where it is now called the "American costume," had any being. In some places it has been called the "Bloomer," in other places it is called by other names. Substantially it is the same thing—"Short Dress." It is worn longer or shorter, loose or tight, with much or little cloth, etc., to suit the taste of different persons, still it is the same, the short dress, compared with the one commonly worn.

As this dress originated in our country with the aborigines of America—the Indians—it is very appropriately called the "American costume." We hope it will be more generally adopted. We wish that those editors of the press, and others, who pretend to so much modesty as to oppose the "Short Dress," would put on an outside garment dragging the streets, and flapping round the feet, or kept off only by hoops, and wear the same in their labor and business for one year. They will then be better prepared to judge of the difference between the two, and which to recommend for the comfort and health of others.

J. S. WHITE.

NOTE.—For further and practical particulars in relation to the "Short Dress," or "American costume," we would refer our readers to Dr. Harriet N. Austin's Tract on the same.—ED.

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,
Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months	15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for three months for 40 cents, which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of brethren, they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Rules for Correspondents.

Over all matters not intended for publication, write PRIVATE.

Over all communications for the paper, write FOR THE CRISIS.

Over all business matters, write BUSINESS.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to Eld. MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass.

The postage on the Crisis, if prepaid, quarterly or yearly, at the office where it is received, will be 13 cents a year to any part of Massachusetts, and 26 cents to any other part of the United States.

☞ Canada Subscribers have to PRE-PAY the postage on their papers, 26 cents a year, in addition to the above; i. e. $1 will pay for twenty-three numbers, or $2.25 a year. The same to all the Provinces.
